

Constanting of the Constanting o

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2007 with funding from Microsoft Corporation

Historical and Critical Account

OFTHE

L T E

OF

OLIVER CROMWELL,

Lord Protector of the Commonwealth of ENGLAND, SCOTLAND and IRELAND.

After the Manner of Mr. BAYLE.

Drawn from Original Writers and State Papers.

To which is added,

An APPENDIX of Original Papers, Now first published.

By WILLIAM HARRIS.

Ne quid falsi dicere audeat, ne quid veri non audeat.

CICERO.

LONDON:

Printed for A. MILLAR in the Strand.

MDCCLXII.

CON 32ENTS

H24h 1 113 miles 1

The second of the state of the second of the

The state of the s

State of the state

1.7 (1)

ROMWELL's birth and parentage. Allied to the best A families. Trade no disgrace to a gentleman, p. 1-3. Of the learning of Cromwell, p. 4. Vicious in youth, p. 5. Marries p. 6. Character of Mrs. Cromwell, p. 6-8. Reports concerning the poverty of Cromwell, p. 9. Reflections on them, p. 10. Of the Religion of Cromwell, p. 11. An original letter of his to Mr. Storie, p. 12. Of his enthusiasm, p. 13-23. Cromwell courteous and affable, and inclined to buffoonery, p. 24. Though on necessary occasions he kept state to the full, p. 27. Of his want of eloquence, p. 34. Mr. Hume censured, p. 35. Cromwell's speech to the Swedish ambassador commended, p. 36. Cromwell no bigot, p. 37. Mischief of bigottry, ibid. Cromwell the great Patron of religious liberty, p. 38-45. Falls in with the Puritans, p. 45. Short state of the case between them and the Prelatists, p. 46.

Character of Court-Prelates in the times of James and Charles I. p. 47. Of the severe measures taken in the times of the latter of these Princes, p. 50. Cromwell with others prepare to leave the kingdom, p. 55. Are stop'd by a proclamation, ibid. Reflections thereon, p. 56. Of Cromwell's opposition to the draining the Fenns, p. 56. Of the parliament in 1641, p. 59. Justly celebrated for their noble deeds, p. 62-65. High characters of it by Mr. Sidney and Mr. Trenchard, p. 69. Account of the remonstrance of the state of the kingdom, p. 70-76. The Parliament puts itself in a state of defence—Is adhered to by Cromwell, who raises a troop of horse, and disciplines them in a most extraordinary manner. Praise of Cromwell's army by Lord Clarendon, p. 76-85. Of Cromwell's first actions in the War, p. 85. Lord Holles's charge of cowardice against him recited, p. 87. Hated and envied by very powerful persons. Account of a consultation to accuse him of high treason, p. 90—93. Of the dissimulation of Cromwell. Proofs of it. Its reconcileableness with enthusiasm, and other principles held by him. Politicians dispense with the rules of morality. Restections thereon, p. 94—106. Of the self-denying ordinance—Reasons on which it was founded—Cromwell's speech in its favour—Whitlock's against it—Restections thereon, p. 107—119. Cromwell by various votes exempted from the self-denying ordinance—Mistakes of Lord Clarendon, p. 120—126. Of the baitle of Naseby—Copies of original letters relating to it—Fatal to Charles I. p. 127—133. Rewards bestowed by the parliament on Cromwell for his services—Complaints of effices and preferments being shared among members of Parliament—Restections thereon, p. 134—138.

A 2

Character of Fairfax—Ambition of Cromwell—Major Huntington's account of his principles and practices—Vindicated by Milton; p. 139—155. The army, by the infligation of Cromwell, grow mutinous—Refuse to disband—Cause the parliament to erase out of their journals what was displeasing to them, p. 156—166.

Cornet Joyce seizes the King at Holmby—His Majesty refuses to return back—Relies on his supposed interest in the army. Mistakes of Clarendon and Perincheis, p. 167—170.

Cromwell breaks off all thoughts of friendship with Charles —Reasons of it—Restections thereon, p. 171—180.

Cromwell defeats the Welch and Scots who appeared in behalf of the King—His Majesty by the army is seized at Newport; and carried to Hurst Castle—The house of commons purged—Petition of Colonel Pride's regiment to Fairfax—Spirit of the English royalists—Cromwell thanked by the parsiament, p. 181—190.

The reasons alledged for purging the house of commons by Goodwin, Milton, and others. Restections thereon.

An applogy for Cromwell, p. 191-203.

Cromwell has a principal hand in the death of Charles.

Proofs of it, p. 204-207.

The execution of Charles loudly exclaimed against, and Cromwell reproached on the account of it. Reasons given by his advocates in defence of the deed. The 30th of January

January observed by the English merchants at Dantzick, in memorial of their deliverance from slavery, p. 208-219.

The parliament ast with great spirit and vigour. Account of their proceedings—Publift a declaration in vindication of their actions—Order the great transactions of the commonwealth to be published in Latin, French and English, p. 220—223.

The war in Ireland continued by them. Cromwell appointed commander in chief in that kingdam. He takes Drogheda and puts the garrison to the sword. Reflections, thereon: Ireland reduced. The gallant spirit of Lieutenant General Ludlow, p. 224-233.

The Scots oppose the execution of Charles. Charles II. takes the covenant and is crowned in Scotland. The Scots prepare to invade England.—Fairfax resigns his commission. Cromwell appointed general in his room.—Sets forward for Scotland—The battle of Dunbar—Joy of the friends of Cromwell and the commonwealth. Charles II.
marches to Worcester—Is totally overthrown—Scotland wholly subdued. Honours paid to Cromwell, p. 234—

Rife and progress of the quarrel with the Dutch—The parliament send ambassadors to the States—Substance of their embassy—Behave with great spirit—St. John's speech at their departure—War commences between the two nations—Declaration of the parliament hereupon—Patriotism and disinterestedness of Sir Henry Vane—Parliament concerned for the honour and interest of the nation—Their demands from the Dutch, p. 252—271.

Vast designs imputed to the commonwealth of England— Courted by all nations.—Obtains the highest reputation, p. 272—277.

An act of oblivion passed by the parliament—Cromwell humane and benevolent, p. 278—280.

Of the navigation act. Praised by Sir Josias Child, p. 281.

Parliament projects an union with Scotland. Cromwell finishes it. Superiorities, lordships and jurisdictions abolished. Remarks on Mr. Dalrymple's consure of Cromwell, p. 284—287.

Parliament proposes the new modelling the representation in par-parliament. The steps taken by them in it. Their plan excellent, p. 288-293.

Parliament attempts to reform the law, enact all law-proceedings to be in the English tongue, p. 294-296.

The best pens sought cut and rewarded by the parliament for writing in behalf of civil and religious liberty. Of Milton, Nedham, the Parkers and others, p. 297-305. Of the provision made for the state clergy and universities-Bishops, and dean and chapters lands sold-Of ecclesiastical Revenues-Produce of the fale of the bishops lands in the province of York. Chancellor Oxenstiern admires the great actions of the parliament, Mr. Hume censured, p. 306-315.

Cromwell puts a period for a time to the commonwealth-Discourse between him and Whitlock concerning his taking on him the King ship. Account of his turning the members out of the house-Censured by Whitlock, and Ludlow, p. 316-323.

Justifications of Cromwell by himself and his apologists on this head-Remarks thereon-Cromwell and the commonwealth leaders characterised by Dr. Warburton,

p. 324-329.

Cromwell constitutes a council of state and calls a parliament-Account of their proceedings. Lord Clarendon's representation of them virulent and false. - Hatred of ecclefiaftics-Parliament refign back their power into the hands of Cromwell. Remarks thereon, p. 330-340.

Cromwell assumes the title of Lord Protector-Of the infrument of government-The Protector endeavours to - justify himself to the army-Reasons given for the new Jettlement-His government, at first, almost universally acquiesced in, p. 341-351.

Cromwell rivals the greatest of our monarchs in glory, and makes himself courted and dreaded by the nations around him. Proofs of it, p. 352-361.

Cromwell gives peace to the Dutch-Conditions of it,

p. 362-365. 1.

Of the medals struck by the Dutch, and the poetical panegrics made on Oliver on this occasion by the universities of Oxford and Cambridge, p. 365-369.

Of the negotiations between England, France and Spain-

Crom-

Cromwell censured by various writers for entering into a war with Spain, and leaguing with France—Reafons in behalf of his conduct on this occasion—A picture of Lewis XIV. in miniature—Cromwell's irresolution and delay justly blameworthy, p. 370—385.

Account of the expedition to Hispaniola-Reasons of the ill success there, p. 386-389.

Of the taking and settling of Jamaica—Cromwell's endeavours to settle it—A remarkable letter written by him to Major-General Fortescue—Importance of Jamaica to Great Britain, p. 390-395.

Gallant actions performed by Admiral Blake—His magnificent burial—His excellent character—His body taken up and buried in a pit.—Politeness and humanity introduced by the Restoration, p. 396—399.

Dunkirk taken by the French, and immediately put into the possession of the English—Remarks on an Anecdote of Dr. Welwood's—The great use of state papers, p. 400—403.

Cromwell interposes in behalf of the Vaudois—Protestantism vindicated from the ridicule and misrepresentation of some late writers.—Cruel usage of the Vaudois—The Protector orders a collection through the kingdom for a supply of their necessities—Account of the negotiations carried on by him abroad for the redress of their grievances, p. 404—411.

Mr. Morland's panegyric on Cromwell-Other panegyrics

on him, p. 412-416.

Ill character given of courts—Cromwell's distinguished by its sobriety and decency, p. 417—419.

The benches filled with able and honest judges-An account of them, p. 420.

Cromwell feeks out every where for men of abilities, and gives them proper employment, p. 422-427.

Favours learning, and is munificent to fuch as excell in science, p. 428-430.

Makes use of the method of kindness and condescension to his enemies, p. 431-434.

Of the revenue of Cromwell—force of according, p. 435.
Of the faults in Cromwell's government—Gruel edict against the episcopal clergy, p. 436—439.

The

The cavaliers receive hard measure from the Protector—Extracts from the declaration in justification thereof—Remarks thereon—Proceedings of Cromwell deeply resented by the cavaliers; p. 440—445.

Account of Cromwell's Major-Generals—A commission to one of them at large—Their instructions—Their transactions, p. 446-451.

Cromwell makes use of pack'd juries on occasion, and displaces judges for refusing to follow his directions, p. 452.

Commits men illegally to prison, and permits them not the benefit of the laws—Restections thereon, p. 454—457.

Of high courts of justice-Objections to them-Reflections thereon, p. 458-460.

Cromwell violates the privileges of parliament, p. 4618
Situation and circumstances of the protector considered, p. 475.
Cromwell results the offered kingship—Reasons alledged to induce him to accept it—Hindered by his nearest relations.
—Probable consequences of his assuming the title of King.
—Of his house of lords—Whether Cromwell could have maintained his government? p. 481—493.

Of his bibaviour in his last sickness—His prayer—Some of his expressions. Tillotson's opinion of him, p. 494. Various characters of Cromwell—Lewis XIV. characterized.—Dangerous to paint out the enemies of mankind in fine colours, p. 496.

Cromwell's memory celebrated by the best pens of his age— Time the great friend to truth, p. 498. Appendix of original papers, p. 501.

ERRATA.

P. 16, l. 21, for baje read bare.

P. 67, in the text, after net, add doubt.

P. 69, 1. 5, in the text, for Chickely, read Chickely.

P. 178, l.9, from the bottom, for quamvis, read quamvis. P. 220, l. 4, from the bottom, for rigour, read vigour.

P. 252, I. 4, in the notes, for illus, read illud.

Id. 1. 5, for antea, read ante.

P. 305, for James I. read James II.

P. 513, 1. 14, for wideme, read wisdome.

THE

LIFE

O F

OLIVER CROMWELL.

Cromwell, and Elizabeth Stuart, his wife, was born at Huntington, on the twenty fourth of April, one thousand five hundred ninety nine. His family, which was considerable, I shall give some account of in the note (A).

He

(A) I shall give some account of his family.] We are naturally inquisitive about the descents and alliances of those who have figured in the world. Whether they sprung from new or old families? whether their fathers were men of renown? or they themselves first gave lustre to their name? are questions usually asked by such as read or hear concerning them. To gratify the curiosity of the reader then, the following account

В

(a) Short

troubles in

458. Ox-

Folio.

He was educated in grammar learning in the Free-school at Huntington, under Dr. Thomas has been collected .____ ' That his (Oliver's) extraction by the father's fide, was from Sir Richard Wil-· liams, Knight, a gentleman of eminent note (fays Sir William Dugdale) in the court of king Henry VIII. ' and fon to Morgan ap Williams (a Welchman) by fifter to Thomas lord Cromwell earl of Effex, is not to be doubted. Who being by his uncle preferred to the fervice of king Henry, was for that ' cause (and no other) called Cromwell, as is apparent View of the enough from testimonies of credit (a).' If I have not been misinformed, many gentlemen of the name England, p. of Williams, in Wales, value themselves on this descent of Oliver Cronwell. Dugdale's account has been lately ford, 1681. contested by a gentleman who thinks it ' more probable that this family descended by the semales from · Raith lord Cromwell of Tattenhall in Lincolnshire, the alast heir male of which was lord High Treasurer in the reign of Henry VI. and one of his coheiresses married Sir William Williams, whose descendents might aff terwards take the name of Cromwell, in hopes of at-' taining that title which Humphry Bouchier, a younger fon of the then earl of Effex, who married the eldest of the coheiresses, actually had, and was killed at Barnet field, fighting on the fide of king Edward IV. (b)—Which of these accounts is most probable must be left to the judgment of the reader .- However, this is certain, that Sir Richard Cramwell above mentioned was sheriff of Cambridgeshire and Huntingtonsbire in the time of Henry VIII. was a great favourite and commander in the wars, and had grants of abbey lands in Huntingtonshire to the amount, as they were then rated, of three thousand pounds a year.

Bis fon, Sir Himy, was four times theriff of the county. Sir Oliver, uncle to the Protector, gave king James I. the greatest feast that had been given

(b) Biographia Britan- 6 nica, vol. in. Article Cromwell, note (A).

Thomas Beard, a minister of that town; from whence he was sent to Cambridge, entered into Sydney-Sussex College, April 23, 1616, and placed under the tuition of Mr. Richard Howlett (c).

What progress in learning he made in the curiosa, vol. ii. b. 7, p. university we have no particular account of, 66. Wood's but as he understood some Latin, and had ii. c. 88. a taste for polite literature, probably his

to a king by a subject, had a great estate, and was a tealous royalist (d), but had his composition re-Brit. ib. mitted by the parliament for his kinsman's sake (e). This no wonder then to find a family of such a rank (e) Whitallied to the Hampdens, the St. Johns, and the Bar-morials, 2d. ringtons, names of some of our most antient and emi-edit. p. 300. nent families.—Mr. Coke tells us, his father being asked whether he knew the Protector, he said, Yes, and his sather too, when he kept his brew-house in · Huntington (f).' Dugdale will explain this. -- Ro-

• bert Cromwell, fays he, though he was by the coun- (f) Detection, vol. tenance of his elder brother, (Sir Oliver) made a juf- ii. p. 57. tice of peace in Huntington his. had but a flender Lond. 1694.

tice of peace in Huntingtonshire, had but a slender Lond. 1694. estate; much of his support being a brew-house, in Huntington, chiefly managed by his wife, who was fifter to Sir Robert Stewart of the city of Ely, knight, and by her had issue this our famous Oliver (g). (g) Short This every reasonable and considerate person will think View, p. no discredit to the family. For in England trade is not 459 disgraceful to a gentleman. The younger brothers of our best families engage in it, and thereby raise themselves to fortune and independency, and advance the riches and power of their country. A much more honourable method of procuring a maintenance than following the levees of ministers and favourites, and engaging to execute their mischievous and fatal schemes!

THE LIFE

time was not wholly misemployed there (B).

During his continuance at Cambridge, his father dying, he returned home to his mo-

(B) He understood some Latin, and had a taste for po-

(b) History of his own 12mc. p. 100. 1725.

(i) Waller's Life prefix'd to his Po-Lend. 1722. 12mo.

times,

lite literature.] Here are my authorities. Burnet says, he had no foreign language, but the little Latin that fluck to him from his education, which he spoke very ' vitiously and scantily (b).' Another writer observes that The usurper loved, or affected to love, men of wit -Dutch edit. . Mr. Waller frequently waited on him, being his kinf-' man; and as he often declared, observed him to be very well read in the Greek and Roman story (i).' The following passage I give at length, not doubting the reader will be pleafed with it. 'When Cromwell took ems, p. 30. 6 on him the protectorship, in the year 1653, the very morning the ceremony was to be perform'd, a meffenger came to Dr. Manton, to acquaint him that he must immediately come to Whitehall: the Doctor ' asked him the occasion; he told him he should know that when he came there. The Protector himself, without any previous notice, told him what he was to do, i. e. to pray upon that occasion: the Doctor laboured all he could to be excused, and told him it was a work of that nature which required some time to consider and prepare for it. The Protector replied, 'That he knew he was not at a loss to perform the fervice he expected from him; and opening his studydoor, he put him in with his hand, and bid him con-' fider there; which was not above half an hour: the · Doctor employed that time in looking over his books, was a judge. These passages do not indeed prove Oliver's application in the university; but as a taste for books and learning is generally acquired in the early part of life, 'tis no way improbable that he form'd it there.

(1) Life of Dr. Manton, p. 20. Svo. Lond. 1725.

' which he faid was a noble collection (k).' Manton ther, who after some time sent him to Lincolns Inn, where, instead of applying himself to the study of the law, he learn'd the sollies and vices of the town (c).

This

(c) Instead of studying the law, he learn'd the vices and follies of the town.] His small proficiency at Lincolns Inn, we may, I think, fairly enough conclude from the following passage of a profes'd panegyrist. 'He came to Lincolns Inn, where he affociated himself with those of the best rank and quality, and the most ingenuous ' persons; for though he were of a nature not averse 6 to fludy and contemplation; yet he feemed rather addicted to conversation and the reading of men, and their feveral tempers, than to a continual poring up-(1) Pouron authors (1).' But this is by no means sufficient to traiture of give us an idea of Oliver in his younger years. We his royal are by one writer furthermore told, that ' the first Oliver, p. 8. years of his manhood were spent in a dissolute course 12mo. of life, in good fellowship and gaming (m). Dugdale 1659. is more large. 'In his youth, fays he, he was for (m) Warfome time bred up in Cambridge; she omits his be-wick's Me-' ing at one of the inns of court] where he made no moirs, p. e great proficiency in any kind of learning; but then Lond. 1702. and afterwards forting himself with drinking compa-' nions, and the ruder fort of people (being of a rough and blustering disposition) he had the name of a Royfter amongst most that knew him; and by his exorbi-' tances fo wasted his patrimony; that, having attempted his uncle Stewart for a supply of his wants, and finding that by a smooth way of application to him he could not prevail, he endeavoured by colour of claw to lay hold of his estate, representing him as a e person not able to govern it. But therein he fail- (n) Short ed (n). Wood observes, 'that his father dying whilst he was 459.

at Cambridge, he was taken home and fent to Lincolns

This involved him in expences which his fortune would ill bear, and reduced him to some difficulties. But his vices were of no long continuance. He foon recovered himfelf, and at the age of twenty one years, married Elizabeth (D) daughter of Sir James Bouchier.

' Inn to study the common law, but making nothing of it, he was fent for home by his mother, became a debauchee, and a boysterous and rude fellow (0). (o) Fasti, vol. ii. c. 88. Thus, according to these writers, Oliver mispent his time, and fell into vice; and tho' very probably his faults are heightened by the authors here quoted, yet I make no doubt but there is some foundation for the charge. For in a letter to Mrs. St. John, his cozen, dated Ely, 13th Off. 1639, he has the following expressions. You know what my manner of life hath been. O, I lived in, and loved darkness, and hated the light; I was a chief, the chief of finners. This is true, I hated godliness, yet God had mercy on " me (p)." Which words undoubtedly imply some perloe's State Papers, vol. fonal vice or other to which he had been addicted. i. p. 1. Fol. though we cannot, at this distance, well tell what it

Lond. 1742. was with certainty.

> (D) He married Elizabeth Bouchier who shewed due submission to him.] The Bouchiers were antient as a family; from hence probably arose the spirit and pride of Mrs. Cromwell. Whether these led her into any indecencies with respect to her neighbours, appears not even from the foes of the family. With regard to her husband she had merit, i. e. she was affectionate, obedient, submissive, and desirous to please: qualities vastly beyond any which refult from birth, beauty, parts or wealth. What led me to confider her in this light, is the following letter to Oliver, which will be read I dare fay with pleasure, especially as it is the only one of hers which has been handed down to posterity.

De-

OLIVER CROMWELL.

Bouchier, of Effex, knight, said to be a woman of spirit and parts, and not wanting in pride (9), tho' she shewed all due submist- (7). See sion to her husband. Soon after his mar-Heath's Flagellum, riage he fettled at Huntington, his native p. 4. country; but upon the death of his uncle,

Desember the 27th, 1650.

My Dearift,

I Wonder you should blame me for writing nowe oftnir, when I have fent thre for one: I caneonot but thenk they ar miscarid. Truly if I knog my one hart I should ase soune neglect myself ase to the e least thought towards you, hoe in douing of it I must doe it to myself; but when I doe writ, my dear, I ' feldome have any fatisfactore anser, wich makse me thenk my writing is flited, as well it mae; but I cannot but thenk your love covene my weknisis and infirmetis. I should rejoys to hear your desire in seeing me, but I defire to submit to the providens of God, howping the Lord, houe hath seperated us, and heth oftune brought us together agane, wil in heis good time breng us agane, to the prase of heis ' name. Truly my lif is but half a lif in your abseinse, deid not the Lord make it up in heimself, which I must acknoleg to the prase of heis grace. I would you would thenk to writ fometims to your deare frend me Lord Chef Justes, of hom I have oftune put you in mind: and truly, my deare, if you would thenk of what I put you in mind of sume, it might be of as much purpos afe others, writting fumetims a letter to the Presedent, and sometims to the Speiker. Indeid, my deare, you cannot thenk the rong you doe odeld, my deare, you cannot them the tons you do (r) Milton's yourfelf in the whant of a letter, though it wer but (r) Milton's State Pa-6 feldome. I pray think of, and foe rest yours in all pers, by faithfulnise, ELIZ. CROMWELL (r). 40. Fol. B 4

Sir Robert Stewart, who left him an estate of between four and five hundred pounds a year, he removed to the isle of Ely. Here again it is said that he fell into great streights and difficulties, through an excess of superstition; though the accounts given of it (E) are,

In conformity to the representations of others I have mentioned Mrs. Cromwell's spirit and pride: how the latter appear'd I know not. It is not faid that she lov'd state and magnificence, that she was delighted with flattery, or fond of power. Nor do I remember to have feen any addresses made to her either by the court divines, or poets of her age, though her husband, and her fon Richard had store of them. So that I should rather conclude her meek and humble, than proud and high-spirited; though we have no facts given us from whence we may draw the one or the other conclusion. What confirms me in the opinion of her real good character is, that Duzdale and Bates, who have drawn the most ugly pictures of Cromwell, have left hers untouched, which I'm perswaded they would not have done, could they have found any thing to fasten on. Bates, being physician to the family, must have had opportunities sufficient for information; and after the refloration it was making court to abuse any part of Oliver's family.

I am confirmed in my opinion of Mrs. Cromwell, by the following passage in Ludlew, which I observed not till I had written the above. 'He [the Protector] removed from the Cock-pit, which house the parliament had assigned him, to take possession of Whitehall, which he assigned to himself. His wife seemed at first unwilling to remove thither, the assertance of the became better satisfied with her grandeur (s).'

(E) He fell into streights and difficulties through an excess of superstition.] Let us hear what is said on this

(s) Memoirs, vol. ii. p. 483.

head

are, in my opinion, far enough from being probable.

Cer-

head by writers prejudiced against his memory. Adolescens cum sæmina nobili confarreavit; sed brevi opostea tum sua tum materna bona, (pater enim ante defunctus erat) effusus in luxum, funditus dilapidavit, ' adeo ut ad restim propemodum redigeretur. Dein agens refipiscentiam, concionibus sacris, lectionibus piis, & mortificationis operibus totus vacat; conductoque zythepfario, velut rem familiarem quam ante decoxerat recocturus, eidem dat operam, simul & agriculturæ. Ab eo tempore, avunculo illum fummopere e peroso, Roberto Stewardo equiti, regiorum quorundam & clericorum operâ conciliatus est, hæresque tandem scriptus. Patrimonio tamen paulò post ad ' assem pessundato, statuit Novam Angliam proficisci, omniaque in hunc finem preparat (t). i. e. In his (t) Elenchi youth he married a gentlewoman, but by his profuse Motuum nuperorum and luxurious way of living, in a fhort time he fquan- in Anglia ab dered away both his mother's and his wife's estate, so Georgio Bathat he was almost reduced to beggary. Afterwards, teo, pars secunda, p. affuming the behaviour of a penitent, he gave him-219, 8vo. felf wholly up to the hearing of fermons, reading of Lond. 1663. godly books, and works of mortification; and having got a brewhouse, he applied himself to the brew-' ing trade, and also to husbandry. After that his uncle Sir Robert Stewart, who had an aversion to him, being reconciled by the means of some clergymen and courtiers, left him his fortune. But shortly after, having again run out of all, he resolved to go to New · England, and prepares all things for that end.' Dugdale, after having spoken of ' his most formally canting in their [the Puritans] demure language and affected tone, and frequenting the fermons of the ' fiercest Beautefeaus,' tells us ' he was necessitated through his low condition to quit a country farm, which he held at St. Ives, and betake himself to Certain 'tis, he was very regular at this time in his whole behaviour, publickly addicted

(u) Short View, p. 460.

' mean lodgings in Cambridge (u).' This necessity another writer lays upon his overmuch religion, which induc'd him to have long prayers with his family in a morning, and again in the afternoon, at which his plowmen and all his country fervants always attended. Mr. Hume, after his manner, has improv'd upon all these writers. 6 All of a sudden, the spirit of reformation seized him; he married, affected a grave and composed behaviour, entered into all the zeal and rigour of the puritanical party, and offered to restore to every one whatever fums he had formerly gained by gaming. The same vehemence of temper which had transported him into the extreams of pleasure, now distinguished his religious habits. His house was the refort of all the zealous clergy of the party; and his hospitality as well as his liberalities to the fi-· lenced and deprived ministers, proved as chargeable as his former debaucheries. Tho' he had acquired a folerable fortune by a maternal uncle, he found his affairs fo injur'd by his expences, that he was obliged to take a farm at St. Ives, and apply himself, for 6 some years, to agriculture, as a profession. expedient served rather to involve him in further debts s and difficulties. The long prayers which he said to his family in the morning and again in the afternoon, confumed his own time and that of his ploughmen; and he reserved no leizure for the care of his temporal affairs (x).' There is a deal of confusion in all these accounts, and I believe, at the bottom, but little truth. For who can think that Oliver, tho' certainly an enthusiast, had so little sense as to run himself out after fuch a ridiculous manner? No man better knew than himself that there was a season for every thing, and tho' he loved to pray, and preach too on occasion, yet he was never known in any other part of life to neg-

(x) Hiftory of Great Britain, vol. ii. p. 45. 4to. Lond. 1757.

dicted to no vice, but a professor of religion even to a degree of (F) enthusiasm, to which through lect his affairs. Mr. Hume should have known too, that the clergy with whom Gromwell associated, were not of a temper to ruin even the most hospitable: good cheer was far enough from being their chief object. But waving all this, I would be glad to know how these accounts of his poverty are to be reconcil'd with the known facts of his being elected a member of parliament in 1628; and the successful opposition he actually made to the earl of Bedford, and other great men, in the business of draining the Fens?

Sir Philip Warwick, an eminent royalist, lived some time near Huntington (y), and convers'd with Dr. Sim- (y) Mecott, Cromwell's physician, from whom he learn'd many moirs, Peparticulars: but he is totally silent on this head, and therefore very probably there is no truth in what is above related.

Since writing the above, I find Cromwell speaking concerning his situation in life in the sollowing manner. I was by birth a gentleman, living neither in any considerable height, nor yet in obscurity. Words spoken to his parliament Sept. 12, 1654, and abundantly sufficient to consute the idle stories in this note recited. Milton also, speaking concerning him, says, Is matura jam atque sirmata ætate, quam & privatus traduxit, nulla re magis quam religionis cultu purioris, & integritate vitæ cognitus, domi in occulto creverat i. e. Being now arrived to a mature and ripe age, which he spent as a private person, (2) Milton's noted for nothing more than the cultivation of pure Prose Works, for religion, and integrity of life, he was grown rich at wol. ii. home (z). —After this, I hope, we shall hear no more p. 395.

of Oliver's extreme poverty.

(F) He was a professor of religion even to a degree of en- See also the thusiasm.] The reader who has seen nothing but mo- quotation dern manners, may wonder to hear religion made part from Clarendon in of note (P).

through the remaining part of his life he feemed greatly inclined.

This,

of a great man's character. He who should now even but make the least public pretence to it, would go near to be ridicul'd for a fool or a fanatic. The Brutes, the Wrongheads, the Fribbles have figured so long, that they are become very familiar, and deem'd top characters. But in the last century things were otherwise: a man's being religious was thought one qualification even for a post in the army, and mentioned as such by Lord Strafforde (a), and we well know that the appearance of religion was kept up by gentlemen of the most distinguish'd rank. So that Oliver's religion was meritorious in the eyes of those around him, and tended much to advance his character.

(a) Letters and Difpatches, vol. i. p. 17. fol. Lend. 1739.

And that he was really religious, seems to appear from the following letter most generously permitted to be transcribed for me, by the trustees of the British Museum. It is written to Mr. Storie, and dated St. Ives, 7an. 11, 1635.

MR. Storie, amongst the catalogue of those good workes which your fellowe citycenes and our cuntrie men have donn, this will not be reckoned for the least that they have provided for the feedinge of soules: buildinge of hospitalls provides for mens bodyes, to build materiall temples is judged a worke of pietye, but they that procure spiritual sood, they that buildeup spiritual temples, they are the men truly charitable, trulye pious. Such a work as this was your erectinge the lecture in our cuntrie, in the which you placed Dr. Welles, a man of goodnesse and industrie and abilitie to doe good every way: not short of any I knowe in England, and I am perswaded that sithence his cominge, the Lord by him hath wrought much good amongst us. It only remains now that he whoe first moved you to this, put you forward to the continewance thereof, it was the Lord, and therefore to him lift we up our harts that he would ' perfect itt. And furely Mr. Storie it were a piteous thinge to see a lecture fall in the hands of soe manie able and godly men as I am perswaded the founders of this are, in theife times wherin wee fee they are ' fuppressed with too much hast, and violence by the enemies of God, his truth, far be it that foe much ' guilt should sticke to your hands, who live in a citye ' fo renowned for the clere shininge light of the gospell. ' You knowe Mr. Storie to withdrawe the pay is to ' lett fall the lecture, for whoe goeth to warfare at his owne cost. I beseech you therefore in the bowells of Christ Jesus putt it forward and let the good man have his pay. The foules of God his children will bless you for it: and soe shall I, and ever rest

OLIVER CROMWELL.

"Your lovinge friend in the Lord,

OLIVER CROMWELL.

* Commende my hearty love to Mr. Busse, Mr. Beadly, and my other good friends. I would have written to Mr. Busse, but I was loath to trouble him with a longe letter, and I seared I should not receive an answer from him, from you I expect one soe soon as conveniently you may. Vale. To my very lovinge friend Mr. Storie, at the sign of the Dogg in the Royal Exchange London, die. theise.

The importance of this letter to Cremwell's character will excuse the length of it, especially as 'tis an original, and now first published.

But he not only practifed the external duties of religion (real inward religion appears not to men, but by its fruits) but he was carried away into enthusiasm. He fancied himself favoured and distinguished by heaven; that God in answer to his prayers afforded him supernatural illumination and affistance.— I had occasion to converse with Mr. Gramwell's physician, Dr.

· Simcott, who affured me, that for many years his patient was a most fplenetick man, and had phansyes about the cross in that town; and that he had been called up to him at midnight and fuch unfeafonable hours very many times, upon a strong phancy, which made him believe he was then dying; and there went a flory of him, that in the day-time lying melancholy in his bed, he believed that a spirit appeared to him, and told him he should be the greatest man (not mentioning the word King) in this kingdom. Which his " uncle Sir Thomas Steward, who left him all the little · estate Cromwell had, told him was traiterous to relate! The first years of his manhood were spent in a dissolute course of life-but-when he was civiliz'd he joined himself to men of his own temper, who pretended unto transports and revelations (b). The following extracts from some of Oliver's letters will, perhaps, better than any thing else illustrate this part of his character. 'Truly noe poore creature hath 6 more cause to putt forth himselfe in the cause of his · God, then I. I have had plentiful wadges before

(6) Warwick, p. 249.

' his light: one beame in a darke place hath exceedinge much refreshment in it; bleffed be his name for (c) Thurlor, fining upon foe darke a hatt as mine (c).' This vel. i. p. 1. 6 thininge upon foe darke a hatt as mine (c).' was written in 1638. In a letter to the lord Wharton, dated Sept. 2, 1648, we have the following paffages. 'I beseech the Lord make us sensible of this e great mercye heere [the victory over the Scots under Duke Hamilton, I suppose] which surelye was much 6 more then * * * * * the house expresseth. I trust

' hand; and I am fure I shall never earn the least mite. " The Lord accept mee in his Sonn, and give me to walk in the light, and give us to walk in the light, as hee is in the light. He it is that inlighteneth our blacknesse, our darknesse. I dare not say, hee hideth his face from mee; hee giveth me to fee light in

* * * * * * the goodnesse of our God, time and opoportunitye to speak of itt with you face to face. When we think of our God, what are wee! oh!

his mercye to the whole societye of Saincts, despised,

OLIVER CROMWELL.

jeered Saincts. Let them mocke onn. Would we were all Saincts; the best of us are (God knows) poore weake Saincts, yet Saincts; if not sheepe, yet clambs, and must bee fed. We have daily bread and ' shall have itt, in despite of all enimies. There's enough in our fathers house, and he dispenseth itt as our eyes * * * * bekind, then wee can * * * * we for him. I thinke thorough these outward mercyes (as we call them) faith, patience, love, hope, all are exercifed and perfected, yea Christ formed, and growes to a perfect man within us. I knowe not how well to distinguish: the difference is only in the fubject: to a worldly man they are outward: to a Sainct, christian: but I dispute not. My lord I re-' joice in your perticular mercye. I hope that is foe to you; if foe it shall not hurt you, nor make you plott or shift for the younge baron to make him great. 'You will say he is Gods to dispose off, and guide for, and there you will leave him (d). In a letter to the governor of the castle of Edinburgh, dated Sept. 9, 1650, he thus writes: We have faid ' in our papers with what hearts and upon what ac-' compt we came; [into Scotland] and the Lord hath heard us, though you would not, upon as folemn an appeal as any experience can parallel. And although they [the Scots] feem to comfort themselves with being the fons of Jacob, from whom (they fay) God ' hath hid his face for a time; yet it's no wonder, when the Lord hath lift up his hand so eminently against a family, as he hath done so often against this sthe Stuart] and men will not see his hand, if the Lord ' hide his face from such, putting them to shame, both for it and their hatred at his people, as it is this day. When they purely trust to the sword of the spirit, which is the word of God, which is powerful to bring down ftrong holds, and every imagination that exalts itself, which alone is able to square and fitt the stones for the e new Ferusalem; then, and not before, and by that means, ' and no other, shall Jerusalem (which is to be the praise of the whole earth) the city of the Lord be

(d) Thurloe, vol. i. p. 99.

built,

159.

vol. i. p.

(e) Thurloe, 's built, the Sion of the holy one of Ifrael (e).' The governor in his reply telling Cromwell the Scots miniflers faid, ' that they had not fo learned Christ as to hang the equity of their cause upon events:' he reassumed his pen on the same subject, and writes as follows: 'In answer to the witnesse of God upon our folemn appeal; you fay, you have not fo learned 6 Christ, to hang the equity of your cause upon events. We could wish blindnesse hath not been upon your eyes to all those marvellous dispensations, which God hath wrought lately in England. But did not you foe lemnly appeal and pray? Did not we do fo too? And ought not you and we to think with fear and trembling of the hand of the great God in this mighty and strange appearance of his? But can slightly call it an event. Were not both yours and our expectations renewed from time to time, whilst we waited ' upon God, to fee which way he would manifest ' himself upon our appeals? And shall we after all these our prayers, fastings, tears, expectations, and ' solemne appeals, call these base events? The Lord e pity you. Surely we fear, because it hath been a · merciful and gracious deliverance to us. I befeech ' you in the bowels of Christ, search after the mind of ' the Lord in it towards you, and we shall help you by our prayers, that you may find it out; for yet (if we know our hearts at all) our bowels do in Christ ' Jesus earn after the godly in Scotland (f).'---Bishop Burnet tells us, ' that when Cromwell was in the greateft streights and perplexities, just before the battle at · Dunbar, he called his officers to a day of feeking the Lord. He loved to talk much of that matter all his 6 life long afterwards. He said he felt such an enlargee ment of heart in prayer, and fuch quiet upon it; that he bade all about him take heart, for God had cer-' tainly heard them, and would appear for them. ' ter prayer they walked in the Earl of Roxborough's ' gardens that lay under the hill; and by prospective "glasses they discerned a great motion in the Scottish camp. Upon which Cromwell faid; God is delivering them into our hands, they are coming down to (g) Burnet's us (g).' The event was comformable to his expecta-his own tion. times, vol. i.

(f) Id. p. 161.

Whitlock, who well knew the man, writes as follows: p. 82.12mo. From the council of state C. omwell and his son Ireton See Cromwent home with me to supper, where they were very well's letter ' chearful, and feemed extremely well pleafed; we to Lenthall discoursed together till twelve a-clock at night, and in note (LL).

they told me wonderful observations of God's providence, in the affairs of the war, and in the bufiness

of the army's coming to London, and feizing the

" members of the house, in all which were miraculous (b) Mepaffages (b).' morials.

These passages are, I think, abundantly sufficient to P. 384. establish the enthusiasm of Gromwell. However, that the reader may determine the better, let him attend to the following anecdotes which feem to indicate him an hypocrite. ' His rude cant and spiritual simplicity were downright affectation: than which nothing can be more evident from Mr. Waller's observation, and his confession to him. Mr. Waller often took notice, that in the midst of their discourse a servant has come in to tell them fuch and fuch attended; upon which " Cromwell would rife, and stop them, talking at the door, where he could over-hear them fay, The Lord will reveal, The Lord will help, and several such expressions; which when he return'd to Mr. Waller he excus'd, faying, Coufin Waller, I must talk to these ' men after their own way; and would then go on where they left off. This created in Mr. Waller an opinion that he fecretly despised those whom he feem- (i) Waller's ed to court (i).

Life, p. 30.

And the author of the Political history of the age, thinks ' the enthusiasm of Cromwell entirely assum'd and politic; quoting the following anecdote from Oli-" ver St. John, in proof of it, viz. That being one day ' at table with his friends, and looking for the cork of a bottle of champaign which he had opened, on being informed, that some person attended for admittance to fee him, Tell him, fays Cromwell, we are (k) Monthly ' in fearch of the Holy Spirit (k).

Review, for Aug. 1757.

Thefe

These are the passages which seem to destroy the enthusiasm of Oliver; seem, I say, to destroy it—for allowing their truth, in my opinion, they do not in reality do it.—For what do they prove, but that Cromwell sometimes talked inconsistently with his principles? or being at times less under their power, he indulged himself in jesting and raillery, to which he was naturally prone? If two or three casual expressions are to determine a man's character in opposition to his whole speech and behaviour, woe be to those who think themselves virtuous and good. Whoever will consider the times in which Oliver liv'd; the part he bore in the transactions of them; his real principles with respect to returns of prayer; and his opinion express'd in his last moments, will not be long at a loss to determine about his real enthusiasm.

1. The times in which Oliver liv'd were times of reformation. Now ' a reformation is feldom carried on without a heat and a vehemence which borders upon enthusiasm; and as Cicero hath observed that there never was a great man fine afflatu divino, fo in times of religious contests, there seldom was a man very e zealous for liberty civil and evangelical, and a declared and active enemy to infolent tyranny, blind fu-· perstition, political godliness, bigotry and pious frauds, who had not a fervency of zeal which led him on fome occasions fomewhat beyond the fober bounds of temperate reason. When men are thus dispos'd, and have animated each other, and are inflam'd by oppofition, perfecution, and ill usage, they are strongly inclin'd to suspect a divine interpolition, and to explain every frange appearance that way. petuolity spreads far and wide, and seizes even upon children (/).

(1) Jortin's Remarks on ecclefiaffical history, yol, ii.

P. 370.

Another ingenious writer speaking concerning these times observes, 'That in the high serment of national 'spirit, not only did the animosities usual amidst the flames of civil war, spread violently, on both sides;

but that which was peculiar to the complexion and temper of the people of that age; extravagant con-ceits

ceits of a religious kind, operated in the most forcible manner imaginable. The crude mixture of religious and political opinions which is commonly found among the bulk of a people, being then shook to the very bottom; it was no wonder, that, together with the most shining instances of military skill and bravery, 1 of penetrating fagacity and judgment in the management of particular conjunctures and events, of bold-6 nefs, vigilance. and addrefs in planning and executs ing the most dangerous enterprizes; there may also be discerned many evidences of a wild and enthusi-aftic genius affecting the manners and actions of the (m) Nations popular leaders (m).

2. Not only the times in which Oliver liv'd, but the confidered, as a natural characters he bore, and the great and furprizing ac-fource of tions he perform'd, will lead us very naturally to fup-political lipose that he might really think himself under the divine gvo. Lond. guidance. The age of Cromwell was an age of won- 1758. 2d. ders. The king and his nobles were brought low; edit. the poor and the mean were exalted; the foolish things of the world confounded the wife, and the weak things of the world confounded the things which were mighty; and base things of the world, and things which were despis'd, yea things that were not, comparatively, brought to nought things that were. No wonder things fo marvellous, were deem'd by him and others to be the Lord's doings in a peculiar manner, fince they were fo much out of the usual course. And as to himself in particular, from fmall beginnings he had rose to such heights of power and reputation, and done fuch very extraordinary things, that it must have been very difficult for a man of his conflitution, to have forborn thinking that he was personally favour'd by heaven in his undertakings. ' A magistrate convinc'd of the being of a God and a Providence, and conscious that every purpose of his heart intends the honour of that God ' and the good of the people he governs, cannot help believing himself under the special care of the Deity. ' This flows from the very reason and nature of things, and can never be otherwise: God, as surely as he

This, however, spoil'd not his good nature, nor rendered him four, morose, or severe.

On

exists, must necessarily favour such a man, and every fuch man must as necessarily be convinc'd that God does fo favour him. --- And fuch a perswasion will always have more or less influence on the mind, as it falls in with a constitution more or less inclin'd to ' superstition or enthusiasm, which is apt to impute every laudable thought, and every fuccessful action to the special suggestion and affistance of heaven (n). () Middle-3. Cromwell's real opinion concerning returns of ton's Tracts, prayer will clearly shew his enthusiasm. What follows p. 200. 4to. Lond. 1752. may, I believe, be depended on. 'I had heard from feveral (and it had been confirm'd to me by Mr. " Feremy White, who liv'd at Whitehall at the very fame time with Mr. Howe) that the notion of a particular faith in prayer, prevail'd much in Cromwell's court; and that it was a common opinion among them, that fuch as were in a special manner favour'd of God, when they offer'd up prayers and supplications to him for his mercies, either for themselves or others, often had fuch impressions made on their minds and spirits by a divine hand, as fignify'd to them, onot only in the general, that their prayers would be heard, and graciously answered, but that the particular mercies that were fought for, would be cer-' tainly bestowed; nay, and sometimes also intimated 6 to them in what way and manner they would be afforded; and pointed out to them future events before > there was nothing to hinder the utmost freedom, to enquire of Mr. Howe, what he had known about this matter, and what were his apprehensions con-

> 6 hand, which in reality is the fame as inspiration. 4 Having heard of mischief done by the prevalence of this notion, I took the opportunity that offered, when > cerning it? He told me the prevalence of the no-

OLIVER CROMWELL.

On the contrary, from most indisputable autho-

tion that I mentioned at Whitehall, at the time when he lived there, was too notorious to be called in quef-' tion; and that not a little pains was taken to cultivate and support it; and that he once heard a fermon there, (from a person of note) the avow'd design of which was to maintain and defend it. He faid he was fo fully convinced of the ill tendency of fuch a principle, that after the hearing this fermon, he thought himself bound in conscience, when it came e next to his turn to preach before Cromwell, to fet himself industriously to oppose it, and to beat down that spiritual pride and considence, which such fancied impulses and impressions were apt to produce and cherish. He told me, he observed that while he was in the pulpit, Cromwell heard him with great attention, but would fometimes knit his brows, and discover great uneasiness. When the sermon was over, he told me a person of distinction came to him, and ask'd him if he knew what he had done? and fignifyed it to him as his apprehension, that Cromwell would be fo incens'd upon that discourse, that he would find it very difficult ever to make his peace with him, or fecure his favour for the future. " Howe replyed, that he had but discharged his conscience, and could leave the event with God. He told me he afterwards observed, Cromwell was cooler in his carriage to him than before; and fometimes he thought he would have spoken to him of the matter, but he never did, and rather chose to forbear (0).' (0) Calamy's life of Howe, 4. His discourse in his last sickness to his wife, plain- p. 21. 8vo. ly manifests the enthusiasm of his temper. Take it as Lond. 1724. related by his physician Bates. ' Sed nec animo solum egrotat; [he had been just speaking of his domestic ' vexations] sebre siquidem brevi post latica & lenta corripitur, quæ tandem spuriam in tertianam degee neravit. Provecto per septimanam morbo, absque authorities, we are affured, that he was courullis periculi indiciis, (utpote nunc istam mali speciem, nunc aliam præ se ferente;) ut ne prohiberet secundo die ab ambulando forás. Post prandium autem accedentibus ad eum quinque quos habebat medicis, quidam ex tactu pulsum intermissse pronunciat : quo audito ille subito consternatus ore pallet sudatiunculas patitur, & serè deliquium, jubétque se ad lectulum é deportari; atque ibi cardiacis refocillatus, supremum condidit testamentum, sed de rebus privatis & domes-' ticis. Manè summo, cum unus è cæteris visitatum ' veniret, percontatur, quare vultus ei adeo triffis. Cúmque responderet, ità oportere, si cui vitæ ac sa-· lutis ejus pondus incumberet; Vos (inquit) medici ' me creditis intermoriturum: dein cæteris amotis (uxoe rem manu complectens) ita hunc affatur, Tibi pro-' nuncio, non esse mihi hoc morbo moriendum; hujus enim certus sum. Et quia intentiori aspectantem ' oculo ad ista verba cerneret, Tu me (inquit) nè cre-' das infanire; verba veritatis eloquor, certioribus innixus quam vobis Galenus aut Hippocrates vester "Juppedicat rationibus. Deus ipse hoc responsum precibus dedit non meis unius, verum & eorum quibus arctius cum illo commercium & major familiaritas. Pergite alacres, excussa penitus à vultu tristitia, mé-' que instar servuli tractate. Pollere vobis licet prudentia rerum; plus tamen valet natura quam medici fimul omnes; Deus autem naturam longiori superat ' intervallo (p).'-- i. e. ' But all his distemper was onot in his mind alone; for shortly after he was taken with a flow fever, that at length degenerated into a bastard tertian ague. For a weeks time the disease 6 fo continued without any dangerous symptoms, (as appearing sometimes onc, and sometimes another kind of diftemper) that every other day he walked abroad: but after dinner his five physicians coming to wait upon him, one of them having felt his pulse, faid faid that it intermitted: at which suddenly startled, he looked pale, fell into a cold fweat, almost fainted away, and orders himself to be carried to bed, where being refreshed with cordials, he made his will, but only about his private and domestic affairs. Next 6 morning early, when one of his physicians came to visit him, he asked him, why he look'd so sad?' and when he made answer, that so it becomes any one, who had the weighty care of his life and health upon him: Ye physicians, said he, think I shall die. Then ' the company being removed, holding his wife by the hand, to this purpose he spoke to him, I tell you I ' shall not die of this disorder, -I am sure of it. And because he observed him to look more attentively ' upon him at these words, Don't think, said he, that I am mad; I speak the words of truth, upon surer e grounds than your Galen or Hippocrátes furnish you with. God Almighty himself hath given that an-' fwer, not to my prayers alone, but also to the prayers of those who entertain a stricter commerce, and e greater intimacy with him. Go on chearfully, ba-' nishing all sadness from your looks, and deal with ' me as you would with a ferving-man. Ye may have ' skill in the nature of things, yet nature can do more ' than all physicians put together; and God is far more above nature.'

(p) Elenchi, pars 2da. p. 215. courteous and obliging, affable and condefcending,

Burnet confirms this account of the assurance of the divines concerning Cromwell's recovery (q). I (7) History will rest the evidence of the enthusiasm of Oliver here of his own (though many more proofs can be brought of it) not p. 130. doubting but it will appear strong and convincing; and account, in some degree, for those actions and expressions which we shall meet with in the following sheets: account in some degree, I say; for whoever thinks him wholly under the power of this principle, will be greatly mistaken. Cromwell ranks in this re-

fcending, and even strongly, at times (G), inclin'd

spect with Mahamet, and Aurengzebe, who were great masters of themselves, though, by nature, strongly tinc-

tured with enthusiasm.

(G) He was courteous and affable, and inclin'd to buffoonery.] Here are the authorities. Sir Philip Warwick does honor to this part of his character in the following paragraph. 'In his conversation towards me he was ever friendly; tho' at the latter end of the day finding me ever incorrigible, and having fome inducements to suspect me a tamperer, he was sufficiently rigid (r).' Whitlock, even under a fense of an injury done him by Cramwell, owns he was ' goodnatured (s). His affability and condescension will appear also from the same writer. ' As they [Cromwell and Ireton] went home from my house, their coach was stopped and they examined by the guards, to whom they told their names; but the captain of the guards would not believe them, and threatned to carry these two great officers to the court of guard. · Ireton grew a little angry, but Cromwell was chearful with the foldiers, gave them twenty shillings, and 6 commended them and their captain for doing their duty (t). In another place he writes as follows:

The Pretector often advis'd about this [The petition and advice] and other great businesses with the Lord Broghill, Pierpeint, myself, Sir Charles Wolfely and Thurloe, and would be shut up three or sour hours together in private discourse, and none were admitted to come in to him; he would sometimes be very chearful with us, and laying aside his greatness he would be exceeding familiar with us, and by way of diversion, would make verses with us, and every one must try his sancy; he commonly call'd for tobacco, pipes, and a candle, and would now and then take tobacco himself; then he would fall again to his serious and great business, and advise with us rials, p. 627.

(s) Memo-

(r) Memoirs, p.

247.

(t) Id. p. 384. inclin'd to practife some little arts of buffoonery.

But

in those affairs; and this he did often with us, and our counsel was accepted and followed by him, in (4) Memoof most of his greatest affairs (u). These passages, rials, p. 656. fimply and artlefly told, strongly indicate the chearfulness and pleasantry of Cromwell, and shew how well qualified he was to conciliate the affection and regard of those whom he thought it worth his while to (x) See note court (x). Let us now proceed to the buffoonery which is mentioned in the text. 'Mr. Waller lived mostly at Beaconsfield, where his mother dwelt in her widowhood, and often entertained Oliver Cromwell there, during ' his usurpation, he being related to her. But notwithstanding her relation to the usurper, and Colonel · Hampden, the was a royalist in her principles; and when Oliver visited her at Beaconsfield, she would frankly tell him how his pretentions would end. 'The usurper us'd merrily to throw a napkin at her in return, and faid he would not enter into further dife putes with his aunt; for so he-us'd to call her, though on not quite fo nearly related (y). Mr. Cowley speaks (y) Waller's Life, p. 4. of ' his flinging of cushions, and playing at snowballs ' with his fervants (z).' And Mr. Ludlow relates (z) Difthat Cremwell contriv'd a conference to be held in course con-Kingstreet, between those call'd the Grandees of the government house and army, and the Commonwealths-men, in of Oliver which the Grandees, of whom Lieutenant-general " Cromwell was the head, kept themselves in the clouds, s and would not declare their judgments either for a 6 monarchical, ariffocratical, or democratical govern-6 ment; maintaining that any of them might be good in themselves, or for us, according as Providence ' should direct us. The Commonwealths-men declared that monarchy was neither good in itself, nor for us. Notwithstanding what was faid, Cromwell

Cromwell,

But on necessary occasions he kept state

· - profes'd himself unresolved, and having learn'd what he could of the principles and inclinations of those present at the conference, took up a cushion and flung it at my head, and then ran down the stairs; but I overtook him with another, which

(a) Ludlow's Memoirs, vol. i. Switzerland, 1698.

made him hasten down faster than he desired (a). p. 240. 8vo. This fact occurr'd to Mr. Hume, but he could not relate it as it was.—Hear his words. 'After debates, fays he, on this subject [government] the most imporstant which could fall under the discussion of human creatures, Ludlow tells us, that Cromwell, by way of frolic, threw a cushion at his head; and when Lud-6 low took up another cushion, in order to return the compliment, the General ran down stairs, and had almost broke his bones in the hurry (b). -But to Britain, vol. proceed. At the figning of the warrant for the King's execution, we are told ' that Cromwill with his pen mark'd Harry Marten in the face; and Marten did the like to him (c); and also 'that whilst Hugh Peters was shewing the lawfulness of the said execution, and, in his way, exciting them to it from the pulpit, he laughed (d).' I will add but one passage

vincire, nonnunquam in media cibatione, fame non-dum pacata gregarios milites pulfatis tympanis intro-' mittere ut semesas rapterent reliquias. Robustos ac vere militares nocivis & validis exercitiis tractare, · veluti prunà candente nonnunquam ocreis injectà, vel culcitris hinc indè in capita vibratis. Semel autem præludiis hujufmodi probe lassos & risu laxatos præsectos ad cordis apertionem provocavit; eoque

· Minores ductores congiariis frequentius de-

(c) Exact and impartial account of the Trial of the Regicides, p. 247. 4to. Lond. 1660. (d) Id. p. 168.

(b) History

of Great

ii. p. 74.

(e) Bates's Elenchi, pars 2da. P. 179.

' modo ab incautis elicuit arcana quædam, quæ pere petuis tenebris optabaiit postmodum involuta; dum ipse, sententias omnium scrutatus, celaret suam (e).

i. e. ' He would often make feasts for the inferiour officers, and whilft they were feeding, before they had

OLIVER CROMWELL.

to the full (H); appear'd with the pomp fatisfied their hunger, cause the drums to beat and let in the private soldiers to fall on, and snatch away the half-eaten dishes. The robust and sturdy soldiers he loved to divert with violent and hazardous exercises; as by making them sometimes throw a burning coal into one anothers boots, or cushions at one anothers heads. When the officers had sufficiently laugh'd, and tired themselves with these preludes, he would wheedle them to open their hearts freely; and by that means he drew some secrets from the unwary, which afterwards they wished might have been wrapp'd up in everlasting darknes; whilst he, in the mean time, pumping the opinion of all others, concealed his own.' Thus even diversions were made

Cleared his Own. Thus e

fubservient to his policy! (H) He kept state to the full, and appear'd on proper occasions with pomp and magnificence. Cromwell was one of those genius's who are oftimes buried in obscurity, through want of occasion of being known. Thousands spend their lives in retirement who are capable of greater things than most of those whose names are toss'd from every tongue, and voic'd for wife, skilful, able, or valiant. In times of peace these men are little notic'd or known; but they are overlook'd among the herd, or treated with a coolness or difregard which damps their ambition, and establishes 'their virtue. But when civil commotions arife, when the struggle is for liberty or enflavement, ' then a free and active fpirit is rais'd which overspreads the country; every e man finds himfelf, on fuch occasions, his own mafter, and that he may be, whatever he can make ' himself: he knows not how high he may rise, and ' is unaw'd by laws, which are then of no force: he finds his own weight, tries his own strength, and, if ' there is any hidden worth, or curbed mettle in him, ' certainly shews and gives it vent. Accordingly we

and magnificence becoming the head of a rich

fee, that the genius's produc'd at these times, give great proof of reach and capacity, especially in politic

managements and civil affairs in the largest sense (f).

wick's account at large as a proof of it, especially as it will afford pleasure to such of my readers as delight in anecdotes, as, I believe, most do. 'The first time I ever took notice of him [Oliver] was in the very beginning of the parliament held in Nov. 1640, when I vainly thought myfelf a courtly young gentleman: · (For we courtiers valued ourselves much upon our good cloaths.) I came into the house one morning > well clad, and perceived a gentleman speaking (whom I knew not) very ordinarily apparelled; for it was a plain cloth fuit; which seemed to have been made by an ill country taylor; his linen was plain, and onot very clean; and I remember a speck or two of blood upon his little band, which was not much lare ger than his collar; his hat was without a hatband: his stature was of a good fize, his sword stuck close to his fide, his countenance swoln and reddish, his ' voice sharp and untuneable, and his eloquence full of fervour; for the subject matter would not bear much of reason; it being in behalf of a servant of Mr. Prinne's, who had disperst libels against the · Queen for her dancing, and fuch like innocent and courtly sports; and he aggravated the imprisonment of this man by the council table unto that height, that one would have believ'd, the very government · itself had been in great danger by it. I sincerely profess it lessened much my reverence unto that great council, for he was very much hearkned unto. And e yet I liv'd to fee this very gentleman, whom out of ono ill will to him I thus describe, by multiplied good fuccesses, and by real (but usurpt) power; (having had a better taylor, and more converse among good com-

(f) Enquiry into the Life and Writings of Cromwell verified these observations. I will give War-Homer.

OLIVER CROMWELL.

rich and powerful people, and behav'd fuitably company) in my own eye, when for fix weeks togesther I was a prisoner in his serjeant's hands, and daily waited at Whitehall, appear of a great and majestick (g) Me-deportment and comely presence (g).

(g) Memoirs, p.

Lord Clarendon, in the account lately published of his 247. own life, gives us a representation of Oliver's behaviour in a committee, very little to his advantage. Here are his words: ' Mr. Hyde was often heard to mention one private committee, in which he was put accidentally into the chair, upon an inclosure which had been made of f great wastes belonging to the Queen's manors, without the confent of the tenants, the benefit whereof had been given by the Queen to a fervant of near frust; who forthwith fold the lands inclosed to the Earl of Manchester, Lord Privy Seal; who, together with his fon Mandevil, were now most concerned to maintain the inclosure; against which, as well the inhabitants of other manors, who claimed common in those wastes, as the Queen's tenants of the same, " made loud complaints, as a great oppression, carried ' upon them with a very high hand, and supported by opower. The committee fat in the Queen's court; and Oliver Cromwell being one of them, appeared much concerned to countenance the petitioners, who were numerous, together with their witnesses; the Lord Mandevil being likewise present as a party, and by the direction of the committee, fitting covered. Cromwell (who had never before been heard to speak in the House of Commons) ordered the wite nesses and petitioners in the method of the proceeding; and feconded, and enlarged upon what they ' faid with great passion; and the witnesses, and perfons concerned, who were a very rude kind of peo-' ple, interrupted the council, and witnesses on the other fide, with great clamour when they faid any thing that did not please them; so that Mr. Hyde ' (whofe ably to the high rank in which he had plac'd himself.

Elo-

' (whose office it was to oblige men of all forts to keep order) was compelled to use some sharp reproofs, and fome threats, to reduce them to fuch a temper, that the business might be quietly heard. Cromwell in great fury reproached the chairman for being partial, and that he discountenanced the witnesses by threat-' ning them; the other appealed to the committee, who ' justified him, and declared that he behaved as he ought to do; which more inflamed him, who was already too much angry. When upon any mention of matter of fact, or the proceeding before, and at the inclosure, the Lord Mandevil defired to be heard, and with great modesty related what had been done, or explained what had been faid, Mr. Cromwell did ' answer, and reply upon him, with so much indeeency, and rudeness, and in language, so contrary, and offensive, that every man would have thought, that as their natures and their manners were as oppo-· fite as it is possible, fo their interest could never have been the fame. In the end his whole carriage was 6 fo tempestuous, and his behaviour so insolent, that the chairman found himself obliged to reprehend him; and to tell him, if he proceeded in the same manner, he would prefently adjourn the committee, and the next morning complain to the house of him, which he never forgate; and took all occasions afterwards to pursue him with the utmost malice and frevenge, to his death (b).

(b) Life of Lord Clarendon, vol. i.p. 73. 8vo. Oxford 1759.

If one were to judge by this, Cremwe'Ps manners were as rude as his dress uncourtly. But however, this same writer in another place confesses the alteration which was visible in him after he rose to dignity and power. 'As he grew into place and authority, says he, his parts seemed to be raised, as if he had concealed his faculties, till he had occasion to use them;

and

and when he was to act the part of a great man, he 6 did it without any indecency, notwithstanding the (i) Hist. of

want of custom (i).

the Rebellion, vol. vi.

Whitlock has describ'd him two or three times in his public appearances: an account of these will explain what I mean by his keeping state to the full. His inauguration was magnificent. On the 26th of June, 1657, a place being prepared at the upper end of Westmin-· ser-hall, in the midst of it was a rich cloth of state fet up, and under it a chair of state upon an ascent of two degrees, cover'd with carpets; before it a table and a chair by it for the speaker; on each side of the 6 hall were feats built one above another, and cover'd for the members of the parliament; below them feats on the one fide for the judges, and on the other ' fide for the Lord Mayor and aldermen of London. About two of the clock in the afternoon the Protector 6 met the parliament, and gave his confent to fome bills; then the speaker and members went to their ' places in Westminster Hall, and the judges and alder-' men took their places: a little time after this his Highe ness came attended with his own gentlemen, and with the heralds ferjeants at arms: the officers, com-' missioners of the seal, and of the treasury, and his council: the Earl of Warwick carried the sword before him, and the Lord Mayor of London carried the ' city fword.

' His Highness standing under the cloth of state, the fpeaker in the name of the parliament presented to him,

' 1. A robe of purple velvet, lined with ermin, which the speaker, assisted by me and others, put upon his Highness; then he delivered to him the Bible richly ' gilt and boffed; after that the speaker girt the sword" about his Highness, and delivered into his hands the fcepter of maffy gold, and then made a speech to him upon those several things presented to him, wishing him all prosperity in his government, and gave him (k) See the oath; and Mr. Manton (k) by prayer recommend- note [1]. ed his Highness, the parliament, the council, the forces by land and fea, and the whole government. and people of the three nations, to the bleffing and f protection of God. After this the people gave seve-4 ral shouts, and the trumpets founding: the Protector fat in the chair of state, holding the scepter in his hand; on his right-fide fat the ambassador of France. on the left side the ambassador of the United Provinecs. Near to his Highness stood his son Richard, the Lord Deputy Fleetwood, Claypole, master of the horse, 6 his Highnesses council and officers of state; the Earl of Warwick held the fword on the right fide of the chair, and the Lord Mayor of London held the city ' fword on the left hand of the chair; near the Earl of " Warwick stood the Lord Viscount Liste, general Mountague, and I, each of us having a drawn fword in our hands. Then the trumpets founded, and an herald proclaimed his Highnesses title; and proclamation was made, and loud acclamations of the peo-6 ple, God fave the Lord Protector. The ceremonies being ended, his Highness having his train carried by ' the Lord Sherwood, Mr. Rich, the Earl of Warwick's grandchild, and by the Lord Roberts's fon, accompa-' nied by the ambaffadors, and attended as before, went in state to Westminster Hall gate, where he took his rich coach. In the upper end of it himself sat in his ' robes, in the other end fat the Earl of Warwick, in one boot fat his fon Richard, and I with a drawn ' fword in my hand; and in the other boot fat the · Lord Viscount Life, and General Mountague, with ' fwords drawn in their hands; Claypole led the horse of honour in rich caparisons, the life guard and other e guards attended the coach, the officers and the rest rials, p. 662. ' following in coaches to Whitehall (1).' - Cremwell's reception of the Swedish ambassador will give us still a clearer idea of his capacity for acting in the pompous scenes of life. Take it from the author just cited. . His [the ambassador's] people went all bare, two and two before him in order, according to their qualities; the best men last; and next to him, the master of the ceremonies next; before him, I on his right hand

(/) Memo-

Elocution was not his talent: His public fpeeches

' and Strickland on his left hand; they made a handsome fliew in this equipage, and fo went up to the council-' chamber, where the ambaffador repos'd himself, about ' a quarter of an hour, and then word being brought ' that the Protector was ready in the Banquetting-house, he came down into the court again, and in the fame order they went up into the Banquetting boule. Whiteball court was full of foldiers in good order, the stairs and doors were kept by the Protector's guards in their ' livery coats, with halberts, the rooms and passages in ' very handsome order; the Banquetting-house was richly hung with arras, multitudes of gentlemen in it, and of ladies in the galleries. The ambassador's people were all admitted into the room, and made a lane within the rails in the midst of the room. At the upe per end upon a foot-pace and carpet, stood the Protector with a chair of state behind him, and divers of his council and fervants about him. The mafter of the ceremonies went before the ambassador on the left fide; the ambassador in the middle, betwixt me and Strickland, went up in the open lane of the room; as from as they came within the room, at the lower end of the lane, they put off their hats: the ambaffador a ' little while after the rest, and when he was uncover'd, the Protector also put off his hat, and answer'd the ambaffador's three falutations in his coming up to him, and on the foot-pace they faluted each other as usually friends do: and when the Protector put on his hat, the ambaffador put on his, as foon as the other. After a little pause, the ambassador put off his hat, and began to speak, and then put it on again; and when-' foever in his speech he named the King his master, or Sweden, or the Protector, or England, he moved his hat, especially if he mentioned any thing of God, or the good of Christendom, he put off his hat very low; s and the Protector still answered him in the like postures of civility. The ambaffador spoke in the Swedish

fpeeches in general are longwinded, obscure, flat (1) and ambiguous: but whether this was

- language, and after he had done, being but short, his fecretary did interpret it in Latin.—After his inter-
- preter had done, the Protector flood still a pretty while,
 and putting off his hat to the ambassador, with a car-

(m) Memorials, p. 623.

- 'viage full of gravity and state, he answered him in Eng'lift (m).'——Though the ceremonials on these public occasions are, I apprehend, ordered and appointed by the proper officers, yet the man who (having spent forty years of his life in a manner almost wholly in obscurity and remote from courts, as Oliver had done) could act his part so gracefully in them, must have had a genius of a peculiar turn, and greatly superiour to the common class of men.—Mr. Waller seems therefore to have had reason for his complement to him in the following verses:
 - 'Oft have we wonder'd, how you hid in peace A mind proportion'd to fuch things as these; How such a ruling sp'rit you cou'd restrain, And practise first over yourself to reign. Your private life did a just pattern give How sathers, husbands, pious sons shou'd live; Born to command, your princely virtues slept Like humble David's while the slock he kept.'

I cannot close this note without observing the propriety of the Swedish ambassador's making use of his native tongue in his public audience, and the Protector's replying in his own language. It shews the value they each set on their respective countries, and their dislike of putting such a slight on them as to imagine their idiom unpolite or indeterminate. It would not have been amiss if the example had been followed.

(1) Election was not his talent, &c.] Cromwell's want of elequence has been observ'd by many writers. All virtues,

not partly out of defign, may be a question, feeing

virtues, fays Mr. Cowley, being rightly divided into moe ral and intellectual, I know not how we can better ' judge of the former than by mens actions, or of the ' latter than by their writings or speeches! And for these ' latter (which are least in merit, or rather which are only the instruments of mischief where the other are wanting) I think you can hardly pick out the name of a man who ever was called great, besides him we ' are now speaking of, who never left the memory behind him of one wife or witty apothegm even among his domestic servants or greatest flatterers. That little ' in print which remains upon a fad record for him, is fuch, as a fatyr against him would not have made him (n) Dis-fay, for fear of transgressing too much the rules of pro-course con-' bability (n).' Mr. Hume fays that ' he was incapable of expressing Cromwell, himself on this occasion [the crown's being offer'd p. 87. Prinhim] but in a manner which a peasant of the most orhis Works dinary capacity, would justly be ashamed of.' And in 12mo. after quoting a passage from the conference at Whitehall Lond. 1631. to support this affertion, he observes that ' the great defect in Oliver's speeches consists not in his want of elocution, but in his want of ideas. The fagacity of his actions and the absurdity of his discourse, forms the most prodigious contraste that ever was known. · The collection of all his speeches, letters, sermons, ' (for he also wrote sermons) would make a great curiofity, and with a few exceptions might justly pass for (a) Hist. one of the most nonsensical books in the world (0). vol. ii. p. This gentleman's great defects are want of confiftency 79, 80.

with himself, and regard to truth. In the passage here quoted he assures us that ' the great defect in Oliver's fpeeches consists not in his want of elocution, but in his ' want of ideas:' a few pages after he observes that of Mr. Hume's own; I believe no writer worth naming D 2

Cromwell 'was not defective in any talent, except that (p) 1d. p. of elecution (p).' That he wrote fermons is a discovery 90.

feeing he could fpeak and write well on some occasions.

Bigo-

ever before faid it; it is quite unsuitable to his character, and the times.

I have faid in the text that his speeches, in general, are longwinded, obscure, flat, and ambiguous: this will appear to any who will be at the trouble to read his speech at the dissolution of his first parliament, and his speeches at the conference at Whitehall, of which I shall have occasion hereafter to give extracts. The reason of these defects feem to be sometimes the enthusiasm of his temper, which produc'd a kind of expression favouring of cant; other times his being necessitated to find excuses for refuling what he was desirous of; and most times a willingness to hide his real intentions. To which, probably, may be added his having been little used to speak in public affemblies, on public occasions, before he seiz'd the supreme power. - But design I'm perswaded had the greatest share in producing some of his oddest compositions. I have feen, and shall in the following sheets produce copies of original letters written by him, which shew that he knew well how to express himself; his letters to the governor of Edinburgh castle before mention'd are a farther proof of it; and the following speech made off hand to the Swedish ambassador confirms it.

'My Lord Ambasiador, I have great reason to acknowledge with thankfulness, the respects and good affection of the King your master towards this commonwealth, and towards myself in particular, wherefor I shall always retain a very grateful memory, and shall be ready upon all occasions to manifest the high sense and value I have of his majesty's friendship and alliance. My Lord, you are very welcome into England, and during your abode here, you shall find all due regard and respect to be given to your person, and to the business about which you come. I am very willing to enter into a nearer and more strict alliance and friendship with the King of Swedland, as that which in my judgment will tend much to the honor and commodity of both nations, and to the general

Bigottry (K) made no part of Cromwell's cha-

advantage of the protestant interest; I shall nominate fome persons to meet and treat with your lordship upon (9) Whitfuch particulars as you shall communicate to them (q). 6c28. Perhaps a better turn'd answer than this is not to be Secalfo note found in England in Cromwell's age!-it shews what he [w].

could do: though he feldom equall'd it.

(K) Bigottry made no part of Cromwell's character.] See 120 Bigottry ill becomes a great man, if a truly great man is capable of it. In a politician-it is a defect, in a fovereign a fault of the first magnitude. Woe be to that country whose princes and ministers are tinctur'd with it. P. There ecclefiaftics reign-and the rule of ecclefiaftics has been always fevere and tyrannical. Bigottry produc'd the massacres of Paris and Ireland; repeal'd the edict of Naniz; annull'd the privileges of the Moriscoes in Spain; drove the nonconformists out of England; and depriv'd Philip the second of the United Provinces. These were the effects of this fiend, black as the infernal pit where it first was produc'd, and mischievous as Satan its parent. May all princes have it in abhorrence! may they keep its favourers and abettors far from their councils! vain else will be their endeavours for the public, vain their hopes of perpetuating their fame. No prince, 'tis well known, was ever well counfell'd by priests. They have themselves too much in view; their own order too much at heart-They cannot facrifice these though inconsistent with the welfare of the community, nor can they forbear preferring them to the most useful members of it. But the bigot is the tool of the priest. He must be so-from him therefore is to be expected nothing truly generous. We know what Cardinal Granvall did in Spain; what Laud in England; but they had never been in a capacity of executing their mad and destructive schemes, had they had masters less bigotted. But Gremwell had a mind superior, he was character. Like an honest man, he profess'd

above the sway of these kind of men; there was nothing in him for them to work on, they therefore either never attacked him, or desisted. This will appear from his judgment concerning the nature of the ministerial function, and the bounds within which it ought to be confined; his six'd opinion concerning liberty of conscience in matters of religion; and his behaviour towards men

1. Cromwell's open and avowed judgment concerning the nature and bounds of the ministerial function, clearly leads us to conclude that he was free from bigottry. In

of the most different and opposite principles.

his letter to the governor of Edinburgh castle dated Sept. 9, 1650, he says, 'The ministers in England are sup'ported, and have liberty to preach the Gospel, though
'not to raile, nor under pretence thereof to overtop
'the civil power, or debase it as they please. No man
'hath been troubled in England or Ireland for preaching
'the Gospel, nor has any minister been molested in 'Scotland since the coming of the army hither. The 'speaking truth becomes the ministers of Christ. When 'ministers pretend to a glorious reformation, and lay
'the foundation thereof in getting to themselves world'ly power, and can make' worldly mixtures to accomplish the same, such as their late agreement with their
'King, and hopes by him to carry on their design, may
'know, that the Sien promised and hoped for, will not

(r) Thurloe, vol. i. p. 159.

be built with such untempered mortar (r).'

In reply to the Scattish ministers saying 'they had just' cause to regret, that men of civil employments should 'usurp the calling and employment of the ministry:' he asks, 'Are you troubled that Christ is preached? Is 'preaching so inclusive in your function? Doth it scandalize the reformed kirks, and Scatland in particular?' Is it against the covenant? Away with the covenant if this be so. I thought the covenant and these could have been willing, that any should speak good of the name of Christ; if not, it is no covenant of God's his own fentiments, and adher'd to the fect he approving, nor of the kirk's you mention, in fo much the spouse of Christ. Where do you find in Scripture ' a ground to warrant fuch an affertion, that preaching ' is included in your function? Tho' an approbation from men hath order in it, and may doe well, yet he that hath not a better warrant than that, hath none at all. I hope he that ascended up on high may give his gifts to whom he please; and if those gifts be the feal of mission, be not envious, though Eldad and " Medid prophesie. Indeed you erre through the " mistake of the Scriptures; approbation is an act of conveniency in respect of order, not of necessity to ' give faculty to preach the Gospel. Your pretended fear, least error should step in, is like the man, that would keep all the wine out of the country, least men ' should be drunk. It would be found an unjust and unwise jealousie, to deny a man the liberty, he hath by nature, upon a supposition he may abuse it: when ' he doth abuse it, judge. If a man speak foolishly, ye ' fuffer him gladly, because ye are wife; if erroneously, ' the truth more appears by your conviction; stop such a man's mouth with found words, that cannot be gainfaid: if blasphemously, or to the disturbance of the ' publick peace, let the civill magistrate punish him: if truly, rejoice in the truth. And if you will call our speakings together, since we came into Scatland, to provoke one another to love and good works, to faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, and repentance from ' dead works, to charity and love towards you, to pray and mourne for you, and for the bitter returns to, and ' incredulity of our professions of love to you, of the ' truth of which we have made our folemne and humble appeals to the Lord our God, which he hath heard and born witness to; if these things be scandalous to the kirk, and against the covenant, because done by 'men of civill callings, we rejoice in them, notwith-(!) Thurloe, flanding what you fay (s,.'—These are sentiments vol. i. p. which, however tinetur'd with enthusiasm, declare a 161.

he most approv'd;—but he spoke at all times with mind free from bigottry, and incapable of being deluded by the cant of heavenly mission, uninterrupted succession, indelible character, and the power of binding and loosing mens sins! Oliver had a sufficient preservative in his own understanding against the principles and practices of these men who make use of such magical terms.

2. Cromwell's fix'd opinion concerning liberty of conscience in matters of religion, evinces his freedom from bigottry. No bigot has had fense enough to see the plain and just right which every man has to think and act for himself in matters purely of a religious nature; or to be convinc'd that unless men freely and voluntarily choose their religion, they can have no merit in the eyes of God or reasonable men; and consequently that they ought never to be debarr'd from acting according to their own The bigot is always in the right; every man of a different belief is in the wrong; heaven is his own portion, but hell and damnation attend those who think and act opposite to him.——Oliver was not of this cast. He always profess'd it to be his belief that men had a right to think and act for themselves in matters of religion, and that as long as they behav'd peaceably they were free to diffent from the magistrate and the priest. Mr. Ludhav tells us ' the liberty that was to be extended to tender consciences, was an engine by which Crem-"well did most of his work (t).' And Mr. Baxter says, Liberty of conscience he pretended to be most zealous appear that he was indeed fo.

(t) Memoirs, vol. ii. p. 509. (u) Reliquiæ c Baxterianæ, by Silvester, part ii. p. ap 105. Folio. Lond. 1696.

Milton, in the following beautiful fonnet, which I believe every lover of virtue and the mules will read here with pleasure, addresses himself to him as the patron of

for (u).' What follows will I think plainly make it

this most glorious cause.

Cronwell, our chief of men, who through a cloud
Not of war only, but detractions rude,
Guided by faith and matchless fortitude,
To peace and truth thy glorious way hast plough'd,

And

with honour of those who differ'd from him, treated

And on the neck of crowned fortune proud
Hast rear'd God's trophies, and his work pursued, While Darwen stream with blood of Scots imbrued,
And Dunbar field resounds thy praises loud,
And Worcester's laureat wreath. Yet much remains
To conquer still; peace hath her victories
No less renown'd than war: new soes arise
Threatning to bind our souls with secular chains:
Help us to save free conscience from the paw
Of hireling wolves, whose gospel is their maw.

Cromwell's own fentiments concerning this matter will be best known from the following paragraphs in his speech at the dissolution of the parliament in 1654. He is rebuking them for their conduct, and among other things, fays, When you were entered upon this government ' raveling into it, if you had gone upon that foot of account, to have made fuch good and wholfome provi-' fions for the good of the people of these nations, for ' the fettling of fuch matters in things of religion as would have upheld and given countenance to a ' godly ministry, and yet would have given a just liberty to godly men of different judgments, men of the fame ' faith with them, that you call the Orthodox ministry 6 in England, as it is well known the independants ' are, and many under the form of baptism, who are ' found in the faith, only may perhaps be different in ' judgment in some lesser matters, yet as true christians both looking at falvation, only by faith in the blood 6 of Christ, men professing the fear of God, and hav-' ing recourse to the name of God as to a strong tower; I say you might have had opportunity to have settled · peace and quietness amongst all professing godliness, 6 and might have been instrumental, if not to have healed the breaches, yet to have kept the godly of all 6 judgments from running one upon another, and by treated them with much respect and decency, keeping them from being overrun by a common enemy, rendered them and these nations both secure, hap' py, and well fatisfied.

Are these done, or any thing towards them? Is there onot yet upon the spirits of men a strange itch? Nothing ' will fatisfy them, unless they can put their finger upon their brethrens consciences, to pinch them there. do this was no part of the contest we had with the ' common adversary; for religion was not the thing at ' the first contested for, but God brought it to that iffue at last, and gave it to us by way of redundancy, and ' at last it proved to be that which was most dear to us; ' and wherein confided this, more than in obtaining that liberty from the tyranny of the bishops to all species of Protestants, to worship God according to their own light and consciences? for want of which many of our brethren forfook their native countries to feek 6 their bread from strangers, and to live in howling wil-' dernesses; and for which also, many that remained here were imprisoned and otherwise abused. Those who were found in the faith, how proper was it for them to labour for liberty, for a just liberty, that men ' should not be trampled upon for their consciences? Had onot they laboured but lately under the weight of perfecutions, and was it fit for them to fit heavy upon others? Is it ingenuous to ask liberty and not to ' give it? What greater hypocrify, than for those who were oppressed by the bishops, to become the greatest oppressors themselves as soon as their yoke was re-6 moved! I could wish that they who call for liberty now also, had not too much of that spirit if the power ' were in their hands. As for prophane persons, blaf-' phemers, such as preach sedition, the contentious railers, evil speakers, who seek by evil words to corrupt ' good manners, perfons of loofe conversations, punishment from the civil magistrate ought to meet with and openly declar'd for their toleration and encou-

them; because if these pretend conscience, yet walking diforderly, and not according but contrary to the Gospel, and even to natural light, they are judged of all, and their fins being open, makes them subjects (x) Whiteof the magistrate's sword, who ought not to bear it in lock, p. vain (x). In a speech to the parliament, Ap. 3, 614. 1657, speaking concerning the provision made for liberty of conscience in the Humble Petition and Advice, he made use of the following words: ' As to the liberty of 6 men professing godliness under the variety of forms amongst us, you have done that, which was never ' done before; and I pray God it may not fall upon the e people of God as a fault in them, or any fort of them, ' if they do not put fuch a value on what was done, as never was put on any thing fince Christ's time, for (y) Thurfuch a catholick interest of the people of God (y).'— loe, vol.'i.

These extracts fully evince Cromwell's judgment concerning liberty of conscience, and make appear how zealous he indeed was to restrain men from injuring each other on the account of it: in a word, they shew the man, the christian, the politician. I must add, 3. That Oliver's practice was conformable to his principles. Though he declar'd himself an independant, (I suppose as that sect avowedly appear'd for civil and religious liberty in its greatest latitude) yet he confin'd not his respect or his favours to them. He had great latitude of judgment, and conceiv'd that as 'twas very possible for wife and good men to differ in their opinions about many points of religion, yet being equally wife and honest, they ought equally to be regarded. We find Manton praying at his inauguration, Baxter preaching at his court, and Calamy confulted by him on a point of importance. These were all Presbyterians, little affected to him, but inclin'd to the royal interest. The episcopalians, many of them, were treated with equal favour and regard, though the party, as fuch, gave him a good deal of trouble. He fent for Dr. Brownrig, bishop of encouragement. Indeed he constantly was a friend to religious liberty, and an opposer

Exeter.

Exeter, and treated him with great outward respect; he faved Dr. Barnard's life at the taking Droghedah, and made him his almoner; he invited archbishop Usher to him, and us'd him with much civility, converfing with him about the advancement of the protestant religion at home and abroad, and promifing him to make him a lease of some parts of the lands belonging to the archbishoprick of Armagh for 21 years, and at his death, order'd him to be interr'd with great pomp in Westminfler Abby, where Dr. Barnard to a crowded audience preach'd his funeral fermon (z). Dr. Parr, from whom I have the above particulars, imputes Cromwell's ordering this fo honourable an interment of U/her's corps, not only to a defire of advancing his own honor, but likewife to a design of punishing Uher's relations, by putting them to a great expence: but as he owns the Protector contributed two hundred pounds towards it, it is no way likely he had any fuch view. He probably thought, that sufficient for a very honourable buria!those who exceeded it were to blame themselves, if they were hurt thereby. - But 'tis very hard to please those who are dispos'd to find fault. - Cromwell's behaviour was also equally humane to such as profess'd opinions uncountenanc'd by the many in Britain. To John Biddle who was a Unitarian, and the father of the English Unitarians, in his banishment into Scilly, he allowed a penfion of an hundred crowns a year; he admitted Feremiah White and Peter Sterry into the number of his chaplains, though few speculated more freely on the ends and defigns of providence, or more out of the then road; and John Goodwin, though hated by the fashionable ecclefiastics, continued constantly in his favour (a). Nor were even the Romanists that behav'd well, destitute of it. Sir Kenelm Digby, a man of quality, a philo'opher and a catholic, in a letter to Mr. Secretary

(z) Parr's Life of Usher, p. 73, & seuq. folio. Lond. 1626.

(a) Life of Mr. Thom. Firmin, p. 10. 8vo. Lond. 1698.

Thurlee, dated Paris, March 18, 1656, has the following

OLIVER CROMWELL.

poser of spiritual tyranny. No wonder therefore that, in the first part of life, he fell (L) ing passages. 'My obligations to his Highness are so great, that it would be a crime in me to behave myfelf fo negligently as to give cause for any shadow of the least suspicion, or to do any thing that might require an excuse or apology. I make it my business every where, to have all the world take notice how highly I esteem myself obliged to his Highness, and how passionate I am for his service, and for his honor and interest, even to the exposing of my life for them. · I should think my heart were not an honest one, ' if the blood about it were not warmed with any the e least imputation upon my respects and my duty to his (b) Thure Highness, to whom I owe so much (b). Mr. Prynne loe, vol. iv.

informs us, e that Sir Kenelme was lodged by Cromwell p. 52at Whitehall; that he suspended penal laws against (c) True Romish priests; and protected several of them under narrative of his hand and seal (c). 'Tis certain he wrote to the what was governor of Virginia in favour of Lord Baltimore, pro-done, spok-en by, and prietor of Maryland, who was of the Catholic perswa- between fion (d).

I will add but one thing more. 'Tis well known of May, Cromwell (though a believer in the prophecies of the Old 1659. 4to. Testament, equally, to say the least, with our modern without controvertists) was willing to harbour the Jews in Eng-place or land; that he appointed an affembly of men of feveral printer. professions to consider of the expediency of it; and that (d) Thurtwas not owing to him or his council that it prov'd loft p. 724. labour. All these considerations will, if I mistake not, abundantly make appear the truth of the text, that bigottry made no part of Cromwell's character. It may be faid this was all policy - If it was - it was not the policy of bigots, who break through every tie, human and divine, in order to promote their implanted non-

fense and fuperstition.

(L) He fell in with the puritans, greatly oppressed.] The controversy between the prelatists and the puritans

Mr. Prynne,

in with the puritans, greatly oppressed on will appear in the eyes of most, in this age, as very trifling and infignificant, and very unworthy of the attention which was formerly paid it. They were a stiff kind of men, many of them, of both fides; of weak capacities or uninform'd understandings; who impos'd unreasonably, and resisted obstinately. But on the behalf of the puritans, it must be observ'd that they always pretended conscience for their nonconformity, and, probably, as they were very great sufferers, they were fincere. This recommended them, as well as their regular behaviour, to the favour of the friends of civil liberty, and the lovers of virtue. These gentlemen, probably, faw many of their weaknesses, but they approv'd their honesty and integrity, us'd their interest to bring them out of trouble, and generously help'd them in their difficulties. - Another thing there was, which added not a little to their worth in the eyes of many of the most considerable persons of those times, namely, an adherence to the doctrinal articles of the church of England, in the fense of the compilers, and a strong aversion to popery. The gentry then read and wrote books of religious controversy, and very many of them became converts to their party. -- But however, this is certain, the puritans were sufferers; sufferers for conscientiously refusing to practise things which, in the opinion of their adversaries, were of no worth or value; fufferers from men who pretended to be rulers and governors in a Protestant church, whose doctrines they disown'd in many points; and fufferers from men whose pride, ambition, avarice, and cruelty had render'd them odious to the people in general, as well as to wife and considerate men. These persons here meant were courtprelates, in the times of fames and Charles I.

Such as for their bellies fake Creep, and intrude, and climb into the fold.

account of their nonconformity, and appear'd

as

Of other care they little reck'ning make,
Than how to scramble at the shearers feast,
And shove away the worthy bidden guest.
Blind mouths! that scarce themselves know how to hold
A sheep-hook, or have learn'd ought else the least
That to the faithful herdsman's art belongs!
What recks it them? what need they? They are sped;
And when they list, their lean and slashy songs
Grate on their scrannel pipes of wretched straw;
The hungry sheep look up, and are not fed,
But swoln with wind, and the rank mist they draw,
Rot inwardly, and soul contagion spread:
Besides what the grim wolf with privy paw
Daily devours apace, and nothing said.
MILTON

This is not meerly a poetical exaggeration. Soon after these lines were written, a polite writer, who declares himself no puritan, speaks of these bishops in the following terms.— The more our prelates enjoy, the ' more still they seek; and all our three kingdoms are ' grown fo fick of their pride, injustice, and pragmatical faction, that scarce any remedy but blood-letting can cure them. We find in Scripture the most high and holy offices of religion performed by princes, even amongst and above the greatest of priests; but we scarce find any instance at all where priests intermedled with any state affairs, either above or under ' princes: and yet with us now the employing and entrufting of clergymen in temporal business, is held as opolitick as it was in the times of popery: although no time could ever justly boast of that use. But to pass over temporal businesses, how violently have our bi-' shops been in their own canons about ceremonies, and ' indifferencies? and what disturbance hath that vio-6 lence produced? They strive as for the beauty and e glory of religion, to bring in the same forms of-li-' turgy, the same posture of the communion-table, the ' same gesture at the communion, &c. in all our three 6 doas their advocate both in the country and the par-dominions; as if uniformity were always beautiful: and yet we fee all men are created with feveral faces, voices, and complexions, without any deformity to the universe.'-This is a fine thought, and has been frequently made use of by our best advocates for toleration .- The same writer, speaking of the same men, asferts that ' in the high commission, at the council table, ' in the star chamber, and the chequer, churchmen are onow more active than in their own confistories, and ' yet their ambition further aims (as 'tis faid) to the chane cery, court of requests, &c. which could not chuse to redound to the scandal of religion, the obstruction of justice, and vexation of the subject. If there were onot learned and skilful men enough in policy and law to ferve the King, unless divinity were depriv'd of ' fome of her followers, there were fome feeming umbrage why the King might borrow of God; but when God's more holy office is neglected, that the King's ' meaner may be the worse administred, the world much gazes and wonders at it (e).' We may naturally enough imagine men thus ambitious of power and wealth were not overstocked with real religion! and we may, with like probability, conclude that pretences to conscience in their eyes had but an odd and ridiculous appearance! and confequently that the persons who made use of them to justify their opposition to their injunctions would fare little the better for them. I will not enter here into the particulars of the hardships and oppressions which the puritans underwent from the prelates, and the high hand which was carried by these latter over all who opposed them. I have given a sketch of it elsewhere, and must refer such as may be uninform'd However, the following short litany may thither (f). count of the not be unacceptable even to those who are best acquainted with their transactions. It shews their behaviour, and the fense men then had of it.

(e) Discourfe concerning Puritans, p. 6 36. 4to. Lond. printed for Robert Boftock, 1641.

(f) Historical and critical ac-

Life of Charles I.

P. 222.

parliament; that he censur'd and oppos'd the.

A fort LETANIE.

From this prelatical pride and their lordly dignities; From all their superstitious vanities, and Popish ceremonies;

From their late innovations and mischievous policies; From the curfed oath ex officio, and high commission cruelties;

From their Romish clergy, and the peoples unsuffera-

ble miseries:

From their greedy gainful visitations, and the church-

wardens enforced perjuries;

From their most corrupt courts, and their vexing sla-

From all their fruitless shadows, and hypocritical formalities :

From their hatred and malice against Christ's appointed ordinances;

From their needlesly devised and troublesome conformities;

From all their illegal proceedings, and oppressing tyrannies;

From their finful fynods, and all their papal hierar-

From Abaddon and Apollyon, with their priests, jefuits, their favourites, and all their furious blasphemers; Good Lord; deliver us (g).

From this little fatyr appears how ill beloved, yea church of hated, these men were, how tyrannical and cruel they England, p. were deem'd! To oppose these then must have been 39.40. meritorious; to screen such as were oppress'd by them, humane and charitable. Cromwell did this as much as lay in his power. When the puritans were like to come (b) See Philinto trouble, he would attend on Dr. Williams, bishop lips's Life of of Lincoln, at Bugden, and speak in their behalf (b). Williams, What his fuccess was appears not: probably but small, p. 290. 8vo. for Williams being jostled out of savour by the arts of 1700.

Laud,

the court-prelates; and even preferr'd freedom in a foreign land (M) to the flavery and oppreffion

Laud, and Bu:kingham, to the latter of whom he had been a servile tool, was fearful of shewing favour, lest his adversary might get a farther advantage over him.-

In the parliament 1628, we find Cromwell in a ' com-' mittee concerning the pardons granted by the King [Charles] fince the last fession, to certain persons quesstioned in parliament. And we are told that he inform'd the house what countenance the bishop of Winchefter did give to some persons that preached flat poe pery, and mentioned the persons by name, and how by this bishop's means, Manwaring (who by censure the last parliament, was disabled for ever holding any e ecclefiaffical dignity in the church, and confessed the iustice of that censure) is nevertheless preferred to a rich living. If these be the steps to church-prefer-" ment (faid he) what may we expect (i)?" But these lections, vol. efforts of his, as well as of the greatest and best men in the house of commons, were ineffectual. They were protected by Charles, who would rather dissolve a parliament, than degrade a court-prerogative-bishop.

(i) Ruihworth's Coli. p. 655. folio. Lond. 1659 ..

> (M) He preferr'd freedom in a foreign land to the flavery and oppression which were continually increasing at home.] Charles I. and his ministers were bent on introducing uniformity in religion, and despotism in the state. They met with opposition in parliaments-and therefore parliaments for a long course of years were laid aside. Private persons spoke and wrote against the measures purfued; but they got nothing for their pains but fines, imprisonments, or barbarous corporal punitiments. The courts of law indeed were open-but they were properly the King's courts. The prerogative was what they maintain'd and enlarged to the utmost of their power, and no man had a chance to succeed in them, who would not submit to it. In short, the judges declared in effect that the King's will was law, and that the property of the subject, was indeed his. After Hampden's ffand

pression which were continually increasing

at

stand in the great case of ship-money, and the infamous determination of the much greater part of the bench, all was profound filence; a dead calm succeeded; every one look'd about him for a place of refuge and retreat from the iron hand of power. For it was manifest there was no redrefs, and that the men at the helm were for an unrelenting feverity. Let us hear Laud, in his epiftle dedicatory to his malter. God forbid I should ever ' offer to perswade a persecution in any kind, or practise it in the least .- But on the other side, God forbid too, that your Majesty should let both laws and discipline sleep for fear of the name of persecution, and in the mean time let Mr. Fisher and his fellows angle in all parts of your dominions for your subjects. If in your grace and goodness you will spare their e persons: yet I humbly beseech you to see to it, that they be not suffered to lay either their weels, or bait their hooks, or cast their nets in every stream, lest ' that tentation grow both too general, and too firong. · -Now as I would humbly befeech your Majesty ' to keep a serious watch upon these fishermen, --- fo " I would not have you neglect another fort of anglers ' in a shallower water. For they have some ill nets too. And if they may spread them, when, and where they ' will, God knows what may become of it. These have not fo strong a back abroad, as the Romanists have, but that's no argument to suffer them to increase. 'They may grow to equal strength with number. And factious people, at home, of what fect or fond opi-' nion soever they be, are not to be neglected. Partly because they are so near; and 'tis ever a dangerous fire, that begins in the bed straw; and partly, because all those domestick evils, which threaten a rent in church or state, are with far more safety prevented ' by wisdom, than punished by justice.' Thus speaks the great director of affairs to his master. A little afterwards, he fays, ' I know it is a great ease to let every at home. But his intentions were frustrated,

' thing be as it will, and every man believe, and do as he lift. But whether governors in state or church do their duty therewhile, is eafily feen, fince this is an effect of no King in Ifrael. The church of Christ upon earth may be compared to a hive of bees, and that can be no where fo steadily plac'd in this world, but it will be in some danger. And men that care ' neither for the hive nor the bees, have yet a great ' mind to the honey. And having once tafted the ' iweets of the churches maintenance, swallow that for honey, which one day will be more bitter than gall ' in their bowels. Now the King and the prieft, more ' than any other, are bound to look to the integrity of the church in doctrine and manners, and that in the first place. For that's by far the best honey in the · hive. But in the fecond place, they must be careful of the churches maintenance too, else the bees shall ' make honey for others, and have none left for their ' own necessary sustenance, and then all's lost. For we see it in daily and common use, that the honey is onot taken from the bees, but they are destroyed first. Now in this great and bufy work the King and the. priest must not fear to put their hands to the hive, ' though they be fure to be flung. And flung by the bees, whose hive and house they preserve. It was 'King David's case, (God grant it be never yours) ' They came about me (faith the Ffalm 118) like bees. 'This was hard usage enough, yet some profit, some honey might thus be gotten in the end; and that's the King's case. But when it comes to the priest, the ' case is alter'd; They come about him like wasps, or 6 like hornets rather; all sting, and no honey there. And all this many times for no offence, nay fometimes for fervice done them, would they fee it.-Now one thing more let me be bold to observe to your 'Majesty, in particular, concerning your great charge, the church of England. 'Tis in an hard condition.

and, with the rest of the nation, he was

She professes the antient catholick faith; and yet the 6 Romanist condemns her of novelty in her doctrine. ' She practifes church government, as it hath been in " use in all ages, and in all places, where the church of ' Christ hath taken any rooting, both in, and ever fince the Apostles times; and yet the seperatist condemns her for antichristianism, in her discipline. The plain truth is, she is between these two factions, as be-' tween two milstones; and unless your Majesty look to it, to whose trust she is committed, she'll be ground to powder, to an irreparable both dishonour, and loss 6 to this kingdom. And 'tis very remarkable, that while both these press hard upon the church of Eng-' land, both of them cry out upon perfecution, like (k) Dedicafroward children, which scratch, and kick, and bite, tion to his and yet cry out all the while, as if themselves were conference killed (k). These passages, long as they are, will be with Fisher, deem'd curious by many. They discover the man, and Folio. his measures, and shew what his adversaries had to ex- Lond. 1673. pect. Lord Strafforde, though of a much more elevated understanding, came not a whit behind the prelate in rigour. His own account of part of a speech at the council board, in England, written to his intimate friend, Sir Christopher Wandesford, master of the rolls in Ireland, will fully shew this. I will give his justification of himself, on the accusation of rigour, at large. -- 'I " craved admission to justify myself in some particulars, wherein I had been very undefervedly and bloodily tra-6 duc'd. So I related unto them all that had past be-' twixt myself, Earl of St. Albans, Wilmot, Mountnerris, " Piers, Crosby, and the jury of Gallway, that hereupon ' touching and rubbing in the course of my service upon their particulars, themselves and friends have endea-' voured to possess the world, I was a severe and an e austere hard-conditioned man, rather indeed a basha 6 of Buda, than the minister of a pious and christian King. Howbeit, if I were not much mistaken in E 3

made to feel and fear the yoke of tyranny.
We

myself, it was quite the contrary, no man could shew wherein I had expressed it in my nature, no friend I had would charge me with it in my private converfation, no creature had found it in the managing of my own private affairs, so as if I stood clear in all these respects, it was to be confessed by any equal mind that, it was not any thing within, but the necessity of ' his Majesties service, which enforced me into a seeming strictness outwardly. And that was the reason indeed, for where I found a crown, a church, and a people spoil'd, I could not imagine to redeem them from under the preffure with gracious smiles and gentle looks, it would cost warmer water than so. True it was, that where a dominion was once gotten and fet-' tled, it might be flayed and kept where it was by foft and moderate counfels, but where a fovereignty (be it fpoken with reverence) was going down the hill, the nature of men did fo eafily flide into the paths of uncontroul'd liberty, as it would not be brought back without strength, not to be forced up the hill again but by vigour and force. And true it was indeed, I knew no other rule to govern by, but by reward and opunishment, and I must profess that where I found a e person well and intirely set for the service of my master, I should lay my hand under his foot, and add to his respect and power all I might, and that where I found the contrary, I should not handle him in my arms, or footh him in his untoward humour, but if he came in my reach, fo far as honour and justice would warrant me, I must knock him foundly over the 6 knuckles, but no fooner he become a new man, apoply himself as he ought to the government, but I also change my temper, and express myself to him, as " unto that other, by all the good offices I could do him. · If this be sharpness, if this be severity, I desired to be better instructed by his Majesty and their lordships, for in truth it did not feem so to me; however, if I

We know little more of Cromwell's actions,

were once told, that his Majesty liked not to be thus ferved, I would readily conform myfelf, follow the bent and current of my own disposition, which is to be quiet, not to have debates and disputes with any. · Here his Majesty interrupted me and said, that was no feverity, wished me to go on in that way; for, if I ferved him otherwise, I should not serve him as he (1) Letters expected from me (1). Thus it was the welfare of and District the church, and the necessity of his Majesty's service, re-patches, vol. quired persecution and oppression, and forc'd these men, if you'll believe them, to act contrary to their own inclinations. - But whatever was the occasion, the government, of which they had the chief direction, was very severe. 'The severe censures in the star-chamber, and the greatne's of the fines, and the rigorous proceedings to impose ceremonies, the suspending and filencing multitudes of ministers, for not reading in the church the book for sports to be exercis'd on the · Lord's day, caused many of the nation both ministers and others to fell their estates and to set fail for New England, where they held a plantation by patent from (m) Rushthe King (m). The Lord Brooke, and the Lord Say worth, vol. and Seale had actually pitched upon a fpot in New England, whither they purposed to transport themfelves, when the excesses of the court threatned deftruction to the freedom of their country. In 1635, the two lords fent over Mr. George Fenwicke to prepare a retreat for them and their friends, in confe- (n) Walquence of which a little town was built, and called by pole's Catatheir joint names Saybrooke (n).' Among others, thus logue of Royal and inclined, was the patriot Hampden, and his cousin OliNoble Auver Cromwell (0): but being on board they were stop'd thors, vol. i. by a proclamation, whereby all merchants, mafters 12mo.1759.
and owners of ships were forbidden to set forth any (a) Neale's ship or ships with passengers, till they first obtained History of the Puilage ship on that behalf from such of the lords tans, p. 332. of his Majesties privy council as were appointed f or vol. ii. 8vo.

6 the Lond. 1733.

tions, (his opposition to the draining (N) of the fens, projected by a powerful nobleman, excepted) till the parliament summoned, through the bufiness of foreign plantations.' Nothing could be more barbarous than this! To impose laws on men which in conscience they thought they could not comply with; to punish them for their non-complyance, and continually revile them as undutiful and disobedient subjects by reason thereof, and yet not permit them peaceably to depart and enjoy their own opinions in a distant part of the world, yet dependant on the fovereign: to do all this, was base, barbarous and inhuman. But persecutors of all ages and nations are near the same; they are without the feelings and without the understandings of men. Cromwell or Hampden could have given little opposition to the measures of Charles in the wilds of North America. In England they engag'd with spirit against him, and he had reason to repent his hindring their voyage. May fuch at all times be the reward of those who attempt to rule over their fellow men with rigour: may they find that they will not be flaves to Kings or priests! But that they know the rights, by nature conferr'd on them, and will affert them! This will make princes cautious how they give themselves up to arbitrary counsels, and dread the consequences of them. And may every minister, who forgets or tramples on the laws of humanity, have his character at least as much branded as are Strafforde's and Laud's.

(N) He apposed the draining of the sent, &c.] The fenny country reaches sixty eight miles from the borders of Suffolk, to Wainsteet in Lincolnshire, and contains some millions of acres in the four counties of Cambridge, Huntington, Northampton and Lincoln. The draining of it had frequently been considered and debated in Parliament in former times; but, though deem'd useful, was laid aside, through fear that it would soon return to its old state, like the Pontine marshes in Italy, after their drain-

ing

through necessity, by Charles I. in November, one thousand six hundred and forty; a parliament ever memorable in the British annals!

ing (p). 'The Earl of Bedford, and divers of the prin- (p) Cambcipal gentlemen, whose habitations confined upon den's Brithe fens, and who, in the heat of fummer, faw vast tannia quantities of lands, which the fresh waters overslowed vol. i. c. in the winter, lie dry and green, or drainable: whe- 489, 490. ther it was publick spirit, or private advantage, which Fol. Lond. led them thereunto, a stranger cannot determine; they 1722. ' make propositions unto the King to issue out commisfions of fewers to drain those lands, and offer a proportion freely to be given to the crown for its countenance and authority therein: and as all these great and publick works must necessarily concern multitudes of persons, who will never think they have exact jus-' tice done to them for that small pretence of right they have unto some commons; so the commissioners, let ' them do what they can, could never fatisfy such a body of men. And now the King is declared the principal undertaker for the draining; and by this time the vulgar are grown clamorous against these first popular lords and undertakers, who had joined with the King in the fecond undertaking, though they had much better provisions for them than their inte-' rest was ever before: and the commissioners must by multitudes and clamours be withstood; and, as a head of this faction, Mr. Cromwell, in the year 1639, at ' Huntington, appears; which made his activity fo well known to his friend and kinsman, Mr. Hampden, that he, in this parliament, gave a character of Cromwell, of being an active person, and one that would fit well (9) Warat the mark (q). Dugdale tells us, 'his boldness wick, p. 6 and eloquence in this business gained him so much 250. credit, as that, soon after, being necessitated, through his low condition, to quit a country farm, which he held at St. Ives, and betake himself to mean lodgings in Cambridge, the schismatical party there chose nals! ever to be celebrated and admired by the lovers of liberty, for its resolution, firm-

(r) Short View, P. 46c.

him a burgefs, for their corporation, in that unhappy Iong parliament, which began at Westminster the third of November 1640 (r). What were Cromwell's motives to oppose the drainings of the fens is hard, at this distance of time, to say. Ignorance of its utility, suppos'd injury to the common people, who pastured their cattle there, or a desire of ingratiating himself with the country to whom this project was odious, may feparately or jointly have occasioned it. However his fuccessful opposition gave his enemies an occasion afterwards to dignify him with the title of Lord of the Fenns (s).' The reader may perhaps be (s) Mercurius Aulicus, pleased to hear, that, long fince the times I am now writing of, 'the county of Cambridge hath received a very confiderable improvement, by draining the fens in the ifle of Ely, a work that was carried on at a vast expence, but has at last turned to double account, both in gaining much ground, and mending the rest; and also in refining and clearing the air of (f) Gibson's this country (t).' It were to be wished we had more of fuch improvements.——Since writing the above, I find an act of parliament, passed in the year 1649, for draining the great level of the fens. In the preamble of this act it is faid, ! That whereas the faid great level, by reason of frequent overflowings of the rivers have been of small and uncertain profit, but (if drained) may be improved and made profitable, and of great advantage to the commonwealth, and the ' particular owners, &c .- And whereas Francis, late · Earl of Bedford, did undertake the said work, and had ninety-five thousand acres, parcel of the faid great level, decreed and fet forth, in October, in the thirteenth year of the reign of the late King Charles, in recompense thereof; and he and his participants, and their heirs and assigns, have made a good progress therein, with expence of great and vast sums of mo-

Cambden, vol. i. p. 479.

Nov. 5.

1643.

ness and public spirit! In this memorable period Oliver joined the glorious band (o) of

' ney; -but by reason of some late interruptions, the works there made have fallen into decay: Be it therefore enacted and ordained, that William, now Earl of Bedford, &c. in recompence of the aforefaid charge and adventure, and for bearing the charge of draining, and ' maintaining the works from time to time, shall have and enjoy the faid whole ninety-five thousand acres.' Oliver Gromwell, Lieutenant-General, is appointed one of the commissioners, to hear, determine, order, adjudge and execute all fuch things as are prescribed by this act. Another act passed May 26, 1654, under (u) Scobel's the protectorship of Cromwell, for the same purpose (u). collection of From these acts of parliament it plainly appears, that, acts and or-whatever opposition was made to Lord Bedford, and the dinances, other undertakers, yet it hindered not their proceedings; and May that the parliament of the commonwealth of England 1654. Fol. was attentive to the publick utility; and that Granwell Lond, 1653. was wife enough to overcome his prejudices, and join in promoting the common good.

(o) He joined the glorious band of patriots] 'Tis well known how hateful the measures of the court were at the meeting of this parliament. Every thing unpopular, unjust and odious had been put in practice, in order to be able to do without parliaments, and to rule by will and pleasure. Those who had suffered for their opposition to injustice and tyranny, were now the favourites of the people. They were applauded and carested every where; nor could any, with safety, open their mouths against them. In this temper were the people when Charles, by dire necessity, was compelled to call this ever-memorable parliament. The people rejoiced; they hoped the time was now come when they might utter their grievances with impunity, and expect redrefs. Accordingly they, for the most parr, took great care in the choice of their reprefentatives, as esteeming it of the utmost importance to their religion and liberties. Whoever hoped for the honour of a patriots, who wished well to their king, their country, their religion and laws. Here, almost feat in parliament must, at least, have promised fair, and appeared hearty in the cause of his country. Men of this character were not wanting; and, though some friends to tyranny, and future apostates, found means to enter, the majority were honest and upright, of fair intentions and firm resolutions .- Lord Clarendon, fpeaking of them; fays, 'In' the house of commons were many persons of wisdom and gravity, who being possessed of great and plentiful fortunes, though they were undevoted enough to the court, had all imaginable duty for the King, and affection for the government established by law or antient custom; and, without doubt, the major part of that body confifted of men who had no mind to break the peace of the kingdom, or to make any confiderable alteration in the government of church and thate; and therefore all inventions were fet on foot from the beginning to work on them and corrupt them, by suggestions "of the dangers which threatened all that was precious to the · fubject in their liberty and their property, by overthrowing or overmastering the law, and subjecting it to an arbitrary power, and by countenancing popery to the subversion of the protestant religion;" and then, by infusing terrible apprehensions into some, and fo working upon their fears "of being called in question for somewhat they had done, by which they would stand in need of their protection;" and ' raising the hopes of others, "that, by concurring with them, they should be fure to obtain offices, and honours, and any kind of preferment." Though there were too many corrupted and milled by thele feveral temptations, and others who needed no other temptations than from the fierceness of their own natures, and the malice they had contracted against the church and against the court; yet the number was 5 not great of those in whom the government of the most immediately, Cromwell was appointed of a committee, with Mr. Hampden, Mr. Stroode, rest was vested, nor were there many who had the absolute authority to lead, though there was a multitude (x) History disposed to follow (x). What their views and defigns of the Rewere, the same author tells us—— There was observed 1. F. 184. a marvellous elated countenance in many of the members of parliament before they met together in the house; the same men who, six months before, were 6 observed to be of very moderate tempers, and to wish that gentle remedies might be applied, without opening the wound too wide, and exposing it to the air, and rather to cure what was amis, than too strictly to make inquisition into the causes and original of the 6 malady, talked now in another dialect both of things ' and persons; and said that they must now be of another temper than they were the last parliament; that they must not only sweep the house clean below, but must pull down all the cobwebs which hung in the top and corners, that they might not breed dust, and. 6 so make a foul house hereaster; that they had now an opportunity to make their country happy, by re-' moving all grievances, and pulling up the causes of them by the roots, if all men would do their duties; and used much other sharp discourse to the same puropole (y).' And what is there marvellous in this? (y) Id. p. These men had, by very late and fresh experience, found that the King was obstinately bent on his old courses, cherished the same tools of tyranny, hated the fons of freedom, and even dated to imprison men for doing their duty in parliament: I fay, they had lately had new proofs of it, and therefore were not to be blamed for their sharp discourse, or sharper actions.

Immediately, on the opening of this parliament, we find great complaints made of grievances, not only by Mr. Pymme (alone mentioned by Clarendon, who has confounded the business of grievances with Lord Strafforde's affair) but also by Mr. Capel, afterwards Lord

Alderman Pennington, Sir Edward Hungerford, Mr. Kirton, Mr. Holles, Mr. Valentine,

Capel, Sir Henry Bellosis, Sir John Wray, Sir Hugh Cholmely, Sir Philip Musgrave, Sir Francis Seymsur, Sir John Packington, Sir Thomas Barrington, Sir John Co'epepper, and others. The grievances were threefold; 1. some against the privilege of parliament; 2. others to the prejudice of religion; and, 3. another fort against the liberty of the subject. These were enlarged on with no unnatural warmth; their illegality and hardship manifested; the instruments of oppression pointed out, and their demerits displayed; and remedies for removing the grievances were mentioned, viz. by declaring the law where it was doubtful, and providing for the exeworth, vol. cution of the law where it was clear (z). And to the honour of the house of commons it must be faid, that they went briskly to work, and accomplished many of their good intentions, uninfluenced by hope, unawed by fear. They impeached the King's chief ministers, Strafforde and Laud, and brought them deservedly to the block; they declared the judgment of the judges to be false and illegal; they abolished those vile courts of the high-commission and star-chamber, in which so many oppressive and cruel sentences had been passed; they gave liberty to those in captivity for their opposition to the prelates; they provided for the frequency of parliaments, the difuse of which had given boldness to the courtiers; they clipt the wings of the ecclesiastics, and brought them nearer to their first institution; and they would have done many other things, equally useful to that age and posterity, had they not been deferted by some, opposed by others, and hindered by roval authority. But they continued their endeavours notwithstanding, and, for the public good, exposed their fortunes, themselves, and their posterity, to the civil war; in which, had they been overcome, they would all have been treated as traytors and rebels. Mr. Newille had reason then for characterizing them, at least twenty

(z) Rufh-

Mr. Peard, Lord Digby, Mr. St. John, Mr. Selden, Mr. Rous, Mr. Pym, Mr. Bagshaw, and

twenty or thirty of them, 'as men of high and unquestionable reputation, who having stood their ground in feven parliaments before, which, in the two last kings reigns, [this was wrote in the time of Charles II.] had been dissolved abruptly and in wrath, and having refisted the fear of imprison-' ment and great fines for their love to England, as well as the temptation of money and offices to betray it, both inferred by the wicked councellours of that age, tending both to the ruin of our just rights, and the detriment of their master's affairs; I say, having conflantly, and with great magnanimity and honour, 6 made proof of their integrity, they had acquired fo great a reputation, that not only the parliament, but even almost the whole people, stuck to them and were fwayed by them—without fear of being (a) Plato deferted, or, as we fay, left in the lurch (a). Redivivus, Let us hear Milton rehearfing their praises in 1642. 12mo.2dcd. After having mentioned their birth, their education, and their virtue unfullied amidst great discouragements and temptations, he adds, 'Thus, in the midit of all disadvantages and disrespects (some also at last not without imprisonment and open disgraces in the cause 6 of their country) having given proof of themselves to be better made and framed by nature to the love and practice of virtue, than others, under the holiest precepts and best examples, have been headstrong and forme to vice; and having, in all the trials of a firm ingrafted honesty, not oftner buckled in the conflict than given every opposition the foil; this, moreover, was added, by favour from heaven, as an ornae ment and happiness to their virtue, that it should be e neither obscure, in the opinion of men, nor eclipsed for want of matter equal to illustrate itself; God and man confenting, in joint approbation, to chuse them out, as worthiest above others, to be both the great reand Mr. Grimston, to take into consideration the reformers of the church, and the restorers of the commonwealth. Nor did they deceive that expectation which, with the eyes and defires of their country, was fixt upon them; for no fooner did the force of 6 fo much united excellence meet in one globe of brightness and efficacy, but, encountering the dazled resists ance of tyranny, they gave not over, though their enemies were firong and futtle, till they had laid her groveling upon the fatal block: with one stroke winning again our lost liberties and charters, which our forefathers, after so many battles, could scarce maintain. And meeting next, as I may so resemble, with the fecond life of tyranny (for fhe was grown an ambiguous monster, and to be slain in two shapes) guarded with superstition, which hath no small power to captivate the minds of men otherwise most wise, they e neither were taken with her mitred hypocrify, nor terrified with the push of her bestial horns, but, breaking them immediately, forced her to unbend the pontifical brow, and recoil: which repulse, only given to the prelates (that we may imagine how happy their removal would be) was the producement of fuch glorious effects and consequences in the church, that, if I · should compare them with those exploits of highest fame in poems and panegyrics of old, I am certain it would but diminish and impair their worth, who are ' now my argument; for those antient worthies delie vered men from fuch tyrants as were content to inforce only an outward obedience, letting the mind be ' as free as it could; but these have freed us from a doctrine of tyranny that offered violence and corrup-' tion even to the inward perswasion: they set at liber-' ty nations and cities of men, good and bad mixed toegether; but these, opening the prisons and dungeons, called out of darkness and bonds the elect martyrs and witnesses of their Redeemer: they restored the body. to ease and wealth; but these the oppressed conscience the petitions of Leighton and Lilburn *, who *Journals of the house of had commons, Nov. 9. 1640.

to that freedom which is the chief prerogative of the Gospel; taking off those cruel burthens imposed not by necessity, as other tyrants are wont for the safe-' guard of their lives, but laid upon our necks by the ftrange wilfulness and wantonness of a needless' and ' jolly persecutor called indifference. Lastly, Some of those ancient deliverers have had immortal praises, for preferving their citizens from a famine of corn; but these, by this only repulse of an unholy hierar-' chy, almost in a moment replenished with faving knowledge their country, nigh famished for want of that which should feed their souls (b)." This is very Profe just, and admirably expressed; however, 'tis but just- Works, vol. tice to the reader, to let him know that Milton altered i. p. 130. his opinion of these very men, on account that their after proceedings, in his judgment, were unfuitable to these glorious beginnings. His words are worth recording. 'A parliament being called, to redress many things, as 'twas thought, the people, with great cou-rage, and expectation to be eased of what discontented them, chose to their behoof in parliament, such ' as they thought best affected to the public good, and fome indeed men of wisdom and integrity; the rest, (to be fure the greater part) whom wealth or ample e possessions, or bold and active ambition (rather than ' merit) had commended to the fame place. But when once the superficial zeal and popular sumes, that acted their new magistracy, were cooled and spent in them, frait every one betook himself (setting the common-' wealth behind, his private ends before) to do as his own profit or ambition led him. Then was justice delayed, and foon after denied: fpight and favour determined all: hence faction, thence treachery, both at home and in the field: every where wrong and oppression: foul and horrid deeds committed daily, or maintained in fecret, or in open. Some who had been called from shops and warehouses, without other had been so inhumanly used for their opposi-

merit, to fit in supreme councils and committees (as -their breeding was) fell to huckster the commonwealth. Others did thereafter as men could footh and humour them best; so he who would give most, or under covert of hypocritical zeal, infinuate basest, enjoyed unworthily the rewards of learning and fide-" lity; or escaped the punishment of his crimes and ' misdeeds. Their votes and ordinances, which men 6 looked should have contained the repealing of bad laws, and the immediate conflitution of better, re-' founded with nothing elfe, but new impositions, taxes, excises; yearly, monthly, weekly. Not to reckon the offices, gifts and preferments, bestowed and fhared among themselves .- And, if the state were in this plight, religion was not in much better; to reform which, a certain number of divines were caleled, neither chosen by any rule or custom ecclesiastical, nor eminent for either piety or knowledge above others left out, only as each member of parliament, ' in his private fancy, thought fit, so elected one by The most part of them were such as had preach-' ed and cried down, with great shew of zeal, the ava-' rice and pluralities of bishops and prelates; that one cure of fouls was a full employment for one spiritual pastor, how able soever, if not a charge rather above ' human strength. Yet these conscientious men (ere any part of the work done for which they came to-' gether, and that on the public falary) wanted not 6 boldness, to the ignominy and scandal of their pas-' tor-like profession, and especially of their boasted reformation, to feize into their hands, or not unwil-Ingly to accept (besides one, sometimes two or more of the best livings) collegiate masterships in the unie versities, rich lectures in the city, setting fail to all winds that might blow gain into their covetous bo-6 foms; by which means these great rebukers of nonresidence, among so many distant cures, were not 'ashamed tion to the prelates; and we need not but with ashamed to be seen so quickly pluralists and non-residents themselves, to a searful condemnation, doubtless, by their own mouths. And yet the main doctrine, for which they took such pay, and insisted upon with more vehemence than gospel, was but to tell us, in effect, that their doctrine was worth nothing, and the spiritual power of their ministry less

' available than bodily compulsion; persuading the magiffrate to use it, as a stronger means to subdue and bring in conscience than evangelical persuasion; distruffing the virtue of their own spiritual weapons, ' which were given them, if they be rightly called, with full warrant of fufficiency to pull down all thoughts and imaginations that exalt themselves e against God. But while they taught compulsion without convincement, which, not long before, they come plained of, as executed unchristianly against them-6 felves, these intents are clear to have been no better than antichristian; setting up a spiritual tyranny, by a fecular power, to the advancing of their own ' authority above the magistrate, whom they would have ' made their executioner, to punish church-delinquencies, whereof civil laws had no cognizance. " well did their disciples manifest themselves to be no better principled than their teachers; trusted with committeeships, and other gainful offices, upon their commendations for zealous, and (as they sticked not 6 to term them) godly men, but executing their places ' like children of the devil, unfaithfully, unjustly, un-' mercifully, and, where not corruptly, stupidly. So that between them the teachers, and these the disci-6 ples, there hath not been a more ignominious and ' mortal wound to faith, to piety, to the work of reformation, nor more cause of blaspheming given to the enemies of God and truth, fince the first preach- (c) Milton's the enemies of God and truth, fine the first process.

ing of reformation (c).'——A stronger contrast, per. Prose Works, vol. haps, ii. p. 44.

with zeal he joined in it. The tyranny of the bishops had been long odious in his eyes, and haps, never was than what is formed by these two passages of the same writer. However, in this latter, we may observe it is allowed they began well, tho's their after-deeds are represented as black, odious and detestable. Be they what they may, I am not concerned in their vindication. Those of them that fall in my way. I will reprefent fairly, censure candidly, and leavethem to the determination of the reader. That there was a glorious band of patriots in the house of commons, in the beginning of the long parliament, is too evident to be denied. Milton, by mentioning their actions, known facts, has established their character beyond all contradiction. Elated by prosperity, influenced by the priesthood, ensnared by wealth and power, or heated by opposition, 'tis very possible many things were done by them which can never be justified, though allowances be made for times of disorder and confusion: more especially the permitting their clergy to tyrannize over the consciences of men, like the prelates that went before them. This latter, indeed, feems to have given Milton the greatest disgust, who was a mortal foe to the dominion of priefts, and a zealous affertor of the rights. of conscience. He could not bear that the same kind of men should complain of and exercise oppression; that those, in whose cause he had drawn his pen, should defeat all his hopes, and manifest, that 'twas not liberty, but power, they had been contending for.

Because you have thrown off your prelate lord,
And with stiff vows renounc'd his liturgy,
To seize the widow'd whore plurality,
From them, whose sin ye envied, not abhorr'd;
Dare ye for this adjure the civil sword
To sorce our consciences that Christ set free,
And ride us with a classic hierarchy.

OLIVER CROMWELL.

and therefore he adhered to their enemies in all their attacks on them: though he was far enough from having formed a plan of a different government. 'I can tell you, Sirs,' faid he to Sir Thomas Chickely and Sir Philip

Montesquieu feems to account well for a behaviour which appears at first fight so unnatural. 'It is a principle, says he, that every religion which is persecuted becomes itself persecuting; for as soon as by some accidental turn it arises from persecution, it attacks the religion which persecuted it; not as a religion, but as [*] Spirit of Laws, vol. ii, p.

' a tyranny [*].'

The parliament however rectified their conduct, 180. even on this head, to the fore displeasure of the lordly Presbyters, and kept them from misusing and oppressing their brethren. So that upon the whole, though they were not free from faults, yet were they, in the eyes of the knowing and unprejudiced, ' the ablest noblest set of people this nation ever produced.' But let us appeal to facts. - When Van Tromp fet upon Blake in Foleston-bay, the parliament had not above thirteen fhips against threescore, and not a man that had ever ' seen any other fight at sea, than a merchant ship and a pyrate, to oppose the best captain in the world, at-6 tended with many others in valour and experience ' not much inferior to him. Many other difficulties were observed in the unsettled state: few ships, want of money, several factions, and some who to advance e particular interests betrayed the publick. But such was the power of wildom and integrity of those that fat at the helm, and their diligence in chusing men only for their merit, was bleffed with fuch fucces, that in two years our fleets grew to be as famous as our land armies; the reputation and power of our nation rose to a greater height, than when we possessed the better half of France, and the Kings of France and Scotland were our prisoners. All the States, Kings and F 3 6 potenWarwick's Memoirs, p. 177.

lip Warwick, 'what I would not have; 'though I cannot what I would *:' the case of many others I suppose at that time. He appeared very zealous for the remonstrance (P) of the state of the kingdom, which, optentates of Europe, most respectfully, not to say sub-' missively, sought our friendship; and Rome was more ' afraid of Blake, than they had been of the great King of Sweden, when he was ready to invade Italy with a hundred thousand men. This was the work of those, who, if our author [Filmer] fay true, thought basely of the publick concernments; and believing things ' might be well enough managed by others, minded only their private affairs. These were the effects of ' the negligence and ignorance of those, who being suddenly advanced to offices, were removed before they ' understood the duties of them (d).'-Mr. Trenchard celebrates their actions in the following manner. 'The parliament governed for five years, who made their iname famous through the whole earth, conquered their enemies in England, Scotland and Ireland; reduced the kingdom of Portugal to their own terms; recovered our reputation at fea; overcame the Dutch in feveral famous battles; fecured our trade, and managed the publick expences with fo much frugality, (d) Sieney of Government, p. 222. Folio. Lond. 1698.

(e) Short History of standing Armies, p. 19. 8vo. 1739. And notes (KK), (LL), (MM). (f) Lansdowne's Works, vol.

ii. p. 201.

that no estates were gained by private men upon the publick miseries; and at last were passing an act for their own dissolution, and settling the nation in a free and impartial commonwealth; of which the army being associated, thought it necessary to dissolve them (e). The bare recital of these facts is an elogium sufficient: and every man who knows them to be facts, will be disposed to think savourably of those who performed them; and to contemn a writer who has the insolence and ill breeding (though a frequenter of courts and a lover of the polite arts) to call them a pack of knaves (f).

(P) The remonstrance of the state of the kingdom.]

12mo. 1736. remonstrance deserves very particular notice, as it oc-

which, after long and sharp debates, was carried in the house of commons, and ordered to be printed December 15th, 1641. On the fixth of this month he was appointed of a committee with Mr. Pymme, Mr. Lifle, casioned high debates in the house of commons; divifions among the members, and perhaps hastened the refolution of the impeachment and intended feizure of the Lord Kimbolton and the five members, which foon iffued into a war between his Majesty and the two houses. 'The house of commons, says Whitlock, prepared a ' remonstrance of the state of the kingdom; wherein they · mentioned all the mistakes, misfortunes, illegalities, and defaults in government, fince the King's coming to the ' crown, the evil counsels and counsellors, and a ma-' lignant party, that they have no hopes of fettling the distractions of this kingdom, for want of a concur-' rence with the lords. This remonstrance was somewhat roughly penned, both for the matter and the ex-' pressions in it, and met with great oppositions in the ' house; insomuch as the debate of it lasted from three o'clock in the afternoon, till ten o'clock the next morning; and the fitting up all night caused many through weakness or weariness to leave the house, and

· Sir B. R. [Sir Benjamin Rudyard I suppose] to com- (g) Memo-

' pare it to the verdict of a starved jury (g).'

The truth is, this remonstrance contains a concise history of the enormities of Charles's government, the evil counsellors who had, and did guide him, and the mischiefs which they had been meditating against the house itself for their opposition to, and correction of abuses. 'The oppositions, obstructions and other difficulties, fays the remonstrance, wherewith we have been encountred, and which still lye in our way with some strength and much obstinacy, are these: The malignant party whom we have formerly described, to be the actors and promoters of all our misery, they have taken heart

again; F 4

Liste, Sir Guy Palmes, Lord Falkland, Mr. Strode, Sir fobn Strangeways, Sir * * Armyn, * * * Hide; to present some such course to the house, as may be fit to prevent all abuses in the election of members to serve

sagain; they have been able to prefer some of their own factors and agents to degrees of honor, to places of trust and employment even during the parliament. 6. They have endeavoured to work in his Majesty ill impressions and opinions of our proceedings, as if we had altogether done our own work, and not his, and had obtained from him many things very prejudicial to the crown, both in respect of prerogative and profit (b). Again- They have fought, by many subtile practices, to cause jealousies and divisions betwixt us and our brethren of Scotland, by flandering their proceedings and intentions towards us; and by fecret endeavours to infligate and incense them and us one against an-They have had fuch a party of bishops and · popish lords in the house of peers as hath caused much opposition and delay in the profecution of delinquents, hindered the proceedings of divers good bills paffed in the commons house, concerning the reformation of fundry great abuses and corruptions both in church and fate. They have laboured to feduce and corrupt some of the commons house, to draw them into conspiracies and combinations against the liberty of the par-' liament: and by their instruments and agents, they ' have attempted to disaffect and discontent his Majesties army, and to engage it for the maintenance of their wicked and trayterous deligns, the keeping up of bishops in their votes and functions, and by force to compel the parliament to order, limit and dispose their proceedings in such manner as might best concur with the intentions of this dangerous and potent saction. And when one mischievous design and attempt of theirs to bring on the army against the parliament

(b) the Remonstrance of the State of the Kingdom, p. 18. 4to. Lond. 1641.

ferve in the house: and in particular to take into confideration the information given to the house, concerning the election at Arundel in Suffex *: as he was appointed of many of the house

others. of commons.

and the city of London had been discovered and pree vented, they prefently undertook another of the same damnable nature, with this addition to it, to endeawour to make the Scottish army neutral, whilst the Eng-' lish army, which they had laboured to corrupt and in-' venome against us by their false and slanderous suggestions, should execute their malice to the subversion of our religion and the diffolution of our government. 'Thus they have been continually practifing to disturb the peace, and plotting the destruction even of all the 6 King's dominions, and have employed their emiffa-' ries and agents in them all for the promoting of their devilish designs, which the vigilancy of those who were well affected hath still discovered, and deseated before they were ripe for execution in England and " Scotland; only in Ireland, which was farther off, they have had time and opportunity to mould and prepare their work, and had brought it to that perfection, that ' they had possessed themselves of that whole kingdom-6 if their main enterprise upon the city and castle of · Dublin had not been detected and prevented. ——And e certainly, had not God, in his great mercy unto this and, discovered and confounded their former designs, we had been the prologue to this tragedy in Ireland, and had by this time been made the lamentable spec- '(i) The Retacle of misery and consusion (i).'—Lord Clarenden monstrance, &c. p. 21. gives a large account of the passing this remonstrance, and among other particulars, the following: 'They fthe leading men in the house of commons promised themselves they should easily carry it: so that the day it was to be refumed, they entertain'd the house all the morning with other debates, and towards noon call'd for the remonstrance; and it being urg'd by others. So that what has been faid of his being little known, or taken notice of in the beginning of this parliament, must be without fome, that it was too late to enter upon it, with much difficulty they confented, that it should be enter'd upon next morning at nine of the clock; and every clause should be debated; for they would not have the house resolv'd into a committee, which they believ'd would spend too much time. Oliver Cromwell (who 'at that time was little taken notice of) ask'd the Lord · Falkland, why he would have it put off, for that day would quickly have determined it? He answered, there would not have been time enough, for fure it would take some debate. The other replied, A very forry one: they supposing, by the computation they had made, that very few would oppose it.' But he quickly found he was mistaken. For the debates, as appears from the quotation above from Whitlock, being very long, and the house consenting to adjourn, 'As they went out of the house, the Lord Falkland asked Oliver " Cromwell whether there had been a debate? To which he answered, he would take his word another time; and whispered him in the ear, with some affeveration, that if the remonstrance had been rejected, he would have fold all he had the next morning, and e never have feen England more; and he knew there were many other honest men of the same resolution. So near was the poor kingdom at that time to its deli-(k) Vol. ii. ' verance (k).' This reflection is added by his lordship on account of the small majority by which the remonstrance passed, which he says was by nine voices and no more. It is but a trifle; but those who are very po-sitive, should be exact. The numbers for passing the remonstrance were 159; against it, 148 (1); so it pass'd by eleven voices. Sir Ralph Hopton read and presented it to his Majesty at Hampton-Court, who received him and those who accompanied him from the house well, but defired it might not be published till the house had

P. 312.

(/) Journal 22 Nov. 1641.

out foundation.—When the civil war broke out, he adhered to the parliament, raised a troop

his answer. But on the 15th of December following it was order'd to be printed by the commons, notwithflanding. The above anecdote indicates the temper and fpirit of Cromwell, and clearly shews that he was determined no longer to submit to illegal rule ———The remonstrance itself was indeed a very bold thing, and little less than bidding Charles defiance: nor can it much be wonder'd at. They who put it on foot well knew they were the objects of his Majesty's hatred and aversion. What he had attempted against them was apparent; what he intended, they conjectured, and, perhaps, more than he intended. They had no measures now to keep with him, and he us'd as little ceremony with them. For foon after followed his going to the house to seize those whom he deem'd heads of the opposition; his departure from Whitehall; the disputes about the militia; the erecting his standard at Nottingham; in a word, the civil war. I cannot omit the following passages from Warwick; they shew the temper of the times, and the zeal which on both fides was exerted on this memorable occasion. 'Upon the King's return out of Scotland, the city of London's splendid entertainment of him, and the discourses that flew in ' all parts, of the ample satisfaction the King had given 6 (both which they forefaw, before it was put in execution) made them prepare fo foul a remonstrance to e give the King his first entertainment amongst them, that a blacker libel could not be framed either against his person or government; and it passed so tumultuoully two or three nights before the King came to town, that at three of the clock in the morning, when they voted it, I thought, we had all fat in the · valley of the shadow of death; for we, like Joab's and Abner's young men, had catched at each others locks, and sheathed our swords in each others bowels, 6 had not the fagacity and great calmness of Mr. Hamp-6 den. troop of horse, whom he chose and (Q) disciplined in such manner as rendered them terrible

(m) Memoirs, p.

P. 306.

den, by a short speech prevented it, and led us to defer our angry debate until the next morning (m). This passage does honor to Hampden's abilities. Mr. Hume fays, ' there are many gross falshoods in this re-(n) History of Great Bri- 6 monstrance (n): he ought to have pointed them out, tain, vol. i. instead of inventing reasons, and suggesting them to have been offered for and against it.

(Q) He raised a troop of horse, whom he chose and disciplined in such a manner as rendered them terrible to their enemies, &c.] Cromwell adhered to the parliament out of principle and inclination. When therefore they found themselves in danger, and that a war was unavoidable, they put themselves in the best posture of defence, and gave commissions to such members as well as others, as seemed most hearty in the cause. The Earl of Estex, the Earl of Bedford, the Earl of Stamford, Lord Willoughby of Parham, the Earl of Denbigh, Lord St. John, with others of the nobility accepted commissions, and set themfelves with zeal to levy forces to support their cause. Hampden and Holles refused not to bear arms, but raised regiments, placed themselves at their head, and encountered the enemy in the field. As did Sir Philip Stapylton and many others of that brave body. To these joined themselves some young gentlemen of rank and fortune, from a fense of duty and fidelity to their country. Mr. Ludlow, who was undoubtedly an honest man, delivers his own sense of it at that time in the following manner. I thought it my duty, upon confideration of my age and vigorous constitution, as an Englishman, and an invitation to that purpole from my father, to enter into the fervice of my country, in the army com-6 manded by the Earl of Effex, under the authority of the parliament. I thought the justice of that cause I had engaged in to be so evident, that I could not ' imagine it to be attended with much difficulty. For though I supposed that many of the clergy, who had terrible to their enemies, and advanced his own reputation. None perhaps were ever more been the principal authors of our miseries, together with some of the courtiers, and such as absolutely depended on the King for their subfistence, as also some foreigners would adhere to him; yet I could not think · that many of the people, who had been long oppressed with heavy burdens, and now with great difficulty had obtained a parliament, composed of such persons as were willing to run all hazards to procure a lasting ' settlement for the nation, would be either such enemies to themselves, or so ungrateful to those they had trusted, as not to stand by them to the utmost of their ' power: at least (though some might not have so much resolution and courage as to venture all with them, yet) that they would not be fo treacherous and unworthy, to strengthen the hands of the enemy against. ' those who had the laws of God, nature and reason, as well as those of the land, of their side. Soon after ' my engagement in this cause, I met with Mr. Richard Fiennes, fon to the Lord Say, and Mr. Charles Fleetwood, fon to Sir Miles Fleetwood, then a member of the house of commons; with whom consulting, it was resolved by us to assemble as many young gentle-' men of the inns of court, of which we then were, and others, as should be found disposed to this service, ' in order to be instructed together in the use of arms, to render ourselves fit and capable of acting in case there should be occasion to make use of us. To this end we procured a person experienced in military affairs to instruct us in the use of arms; and for some time we frequently met to exercise at the Artillery-Ground in London. And being informed that the par-' liament had resolved to raise a life guard for the Earl ' of Effex, to confift of an hundred gentlemen, under the command of Sir Philip Stape ton a member of pars liament, most of our company entered themselves therein, and made up the greatest part of the said more remarkable for their courage, fobriety and regularity. Indeed the whole under guard; amongst whom were Mr. Richard Fiennes, Mr. Charles Fleetwood, afterwards lieutenant general, ' major general Harrison, colonel Nathaniel Rich, co-(e) Ludlow, 6 lonel Thomlinson, colonel Twisseton, colonel Beswell, vol. i. p. 42, 6 major Whithy and myself, with divers others (a) major Whithy, and myself, with divers others (0).'--Nor was Cromwell behind hand in zeal for this cause, as appears from the following passages in the journals of Whereas Mr. Cromwell hath the house of commons. fent down arms into the county of Cambridge, for the defence of that county; it is this day ordered that Sir Dudley North shall forthwith pay to Mr. Cromwell one hundred pounds, which he hath received from Mr. Crane late high-sheriff of the county of Cambridge; which faid hundred pounds the faid Mr. Crane had remaining in his hands for coat and conduct money. Ordered that Mr. Cromwell do move the lord lieute-' nant for the county of Cambridge, to grant his deputation to some of the inhabitants of the town of Cambridge to train and exercise the inhabitants of that ' town.' This was July 15, 1642. The exact time of his taking a commission I cannot find, though I have looked into many writers for that purpose: .it must however have been in the very beginnings of the civil war. For on the 15th of Aug. 1642, Sir Philip Stapelton gave an account in the house, from the committee for the defence of the kingdom, that 'Mr. Cromwell, ' in Cambridgeshire, had seized the magazine in the castle at Cambridge; and had hindered the carrying of the e plate from that university. And on the 18th of August a committee was appointed to prepare an order for the indemnity of Mr. Cromwell, and Mr. Walton, and ' those that have or shall affift them in the stopping of ' the plate that was going from Cambridge to York (p).' -The first rank he held in the army it is agreed on all hands was that of captain of a troop of horse, which he rose and disciplined after such a manner as rendered them.

OLIVER CROMWELL.

& feg.

(p) Journals.

under his command, merited and obtained the highest character.—The first action that Cromwell them, as well as their after companions, the objects of wonder, admiration, and applause of writers of all parties, in our divided country. Let us hear their testimonies. 'At his first entrance into the wars, being but captain of horse, he had a special care to get re-6 ligious men into his troop: these men were of greater s understanding than common soldiers, and therefore were more apprehensive of the importance and consequence of the war; and making not money, but that which they took for the publick felicity to be their end, they were the more engaged to be valient; for he that maketh money his end, doth esteem his life above his pay, and therefore is like enough to fave it by flight, when danger comes, if possibly he can: but he that maketh the felicity of church and state his end, esteemeth it above his life, and therefore will 6 the fooner lay down his life for it. And men of parts and understanding know how to manage their business, and know that flying is the furest way to death, and that standing to it is the likeliest way to escape; there being many usually that fall in flight, for one that falls ' in valient fight. These things, it is probable, Crom-" well understood; and that none would be such engaged valient men as the religious. But yet I conjecture, that at his first choosing such men into his troop, it ' was the very esteem and love of religious men that principally moved him; and the avoiding of those disorders, mutinies, plunderings and grievances of the ' country, which deboist men in armies are commonly e guilty of: by this means indeed he sped better than he expected. Aires, Desborough, Berry, Evanson, and the rest of that troop, did prove so valient, that as far as I could learn, they never once ran away before an enemy. Hereupon he got a commission to take fome care of the affociated counties, where he brought ' this troop, into a double regiment, of fourteen full troops; and all these as full of religious men as he (9) Reliquiæ could get: these having more than ordinary wit and resolution, had more than ordinary success (q). Cramivell's own account will confirm this. I was a e person, says he, that from my first employment was fuddenly preferred, and lifted up from leffer trufts to greater, from my first being a captain of a troop of horse, and I did labour (as well as I could) to discharge my trust, and God blessed me as it pleased him, and I did truly and plainly, and then in a way of foolish simplicity (as it was judged by verie great and wife men, and good men too) defired to make use of my instruments to help me in this work; and I will deal plainly with you, I had a verie worthy friend then, and he was a verie noble person, and I know his memorie was verie grateful to you all. Mr. · John Hampden, at my first going out into this engagement, (I faw) their men were beaten at every hand; I did indeed, and I defired him that he would make some additions to my Lord Essex's armie, of some regiments, and I told him I would be ferviceable to him, in bringing such men in, as I thought had a fpirit, that would do fomething in the work: this is very true that I tell you, God knows that I lie not. Your troops, faid I, are most of them old decayed ferving-men and tapfters, and fuch kind of fellows; and, faid I, their troops are gentlemens fons, younger fons, and perfons of quality, do you think that the fpirits of fuch base and mean fellows will be ever able to encounter gentlemen, that have honour and coure age and resolution in them? Truly I presented him in this manner conscienciously, and truly I did tell him, you must get men of a spirit, and take it not ill what I fay, (I know you will not) of a spirit that is likely to go on as far as gentlemen will go, or else I am fure you will be beaten still; I told him so, I did truly.

Cromwell undertook was to fecure the town of Cambridge, for the parliament. As the King

Baxterianæ, p. 58.

King had requested a supply of money from truly. He was a wife and worthy person, and he e did think that I talked a good notion, but an impracticable one; truly I told him I could do somewhat in it, I did fo, and truly I must needs fay that to you ' (impart it to what you please) I raised such men as "had the fear of God before them, and made some conficience of what they did, and from that day forward, "I must say to you, they were never beaten, and whereever they were engaged against the enemy, they beat (r) Monarcontinually (r)."—This religion of Oiver and his to be the troops; whatever it was, gave matter for raillery to the best form of cavaliers. As for Noll Cromwell, faid Marchamont in a confe-Needham, he is gone forth in the might of his spirit; rence at with all his train of disciples; every one of whom is whitehall between as David, a man of war, and a prophet; gifted men Oliver and a all, that refolve to their work better than any of the committee of fons of Levi, and run quite through Wales with their parliament, two-edged swords, to convert the gentiles (s). I 8vo. 1660. know not what others may think, but in my opinion (s) Mercuthe character given by Gremwell to his folders of relicious, May gious men, and such as had the fear of God, will be at 30, 1648. least as much to their honour in the eyes of posterity, as that which is contained in the following passage is to the foldiery of -- in much more modern times. It was remarkable in the late war, that when all the different nations which composed the confederate army, were performing their daily devotions, the -- (t) Hanfoldiers only, feemed to have no fense of the being of way's Traa God (t'.' This gentleman does not fay these dar- p. 73. in the ing nien, were never beaten, or that they continually note 4to. beat! The following passage from Whitlock is too remarkable to be neglected. . Cromwell - had a brave regiment of horse of his countrymen, most of them free-holders, and free-holders fons, and who upon matter of conscience, engaged in this quarrel, and under Comwell. And thus being well armed within, by the satisfaction of their own consciences, and with-the university, and intimated his defire of their

(n) Memorials, p. 72.

out, by good iron arms, they would as one man, stand ' firmly, and charge desperately (u).'--- Cromwell is celebrated for his manner of disciplining his foldiers even by an enemy. 'Hi autem initio nec arma tractandi nec equos gnari, diligentia solertiaque bellatores acerrimi evaserunt; equis etenim curandis, nutriendis ac detergendis indies assuefacti sunt, & si opus foret si-' mul humicubando; arma insuper polire, nitida & ufui expedita servare, loricas optimas induere, séque cætero armaturæ genere communire condocefecerat eos Cromwellius. Atque hoc exercitii militaris genere, præ reliquis commilitonum omnibus emicuêre virtute bellica, plurésque ab hoste palmas reportarunt (x). i.e. 'His men, who in the beginning were unskilful both in handling their arms, and managing their hor-6 fes, by diligence and industry became excellent fole diers; for Cromwell used them daily to look after, feed and drefs their horses; and, when it was needful, to blie together with them on the ground; and belides, ' taught them to clean and keep their arms bright, and have them ready for service; to chuse the best armour, and to arm theinselves to the best advantage. Trained up in this kind of military exercise, they excelled all their fellow foldiers in feats of war, and obtained more ' victories over their enemies.' The following stratagem to try the courage of his troopers in the beginning of the war is related by more than one writer. "Upon the first muster of his troop, having privily placed twelve resolute men in an ambuscado (it being e near some of the King's garrisons) upon a signal, on the appointed time, and the faid ambush with a trum-' pet founding, galloped furiously to the body, out of * which some twenty instantly fled out of fear and dif-' may, and were glad the forfeiture was so cheap and easy; and ashamed of their childish and disgraceful deferting of their station and colours, had not the confidence to request their continuance in his service, or (x) Bates's Elenchi, p. 220. pars 2da.

OLIVER CROMWELL.

their plate, for its better fecurity; they packed deny or scruple the rendring their horses to them who fhould fight the Lord's battle in their stead (y).' I am (y) Flagelno judge of military affairs: but I think 'tis a maxim Life, &c. of that good discipline makes good foldiers.' Cromwell Oliver was quite exact in this, and the behaviour of his army Cromwell, was such as merited the greatest praise, even abstracted Lond. 1663. from its valour. Let us hear an eye witness: a pane- Perfect Pogyrist he is; but on this occasion seems to have adhered litician, or pretty much to the truth. Quicquid effuciunt in te of the Life dementes Olivari, nauci non facio, religiofissimum of Oliver imperatorem, religionis mediis in exercitibus defenso- Cromwell, e rem, protectorem, propagatorem, nemo nisi laudum Lond. 1680. tuarum fupra modum invidus hic reperitur, qui te non ' suspexerit, admiratus fuerit, observantia summa non coluerit. Enim vero ubinam terrarum tam religiosus ' visus est imperator, tamquè religiosus exercitus? Mi-' ratus ego sum, varias Angliæ provincias tunc pro nee gotiorum meorum, vel principis mei Serenissimi Ducis Gueldriæ Comitis Hacmundæ necessitate peragrans, easque militibus tu s refertas, ita quietas, tranquil-' las, pacatas, quasi ne unus quidem in illis miles esset, ' sie addictas pietati, quasi monachorum non militum ' legiones in pagis ipfarum dispersæ degerent. Ita certa e fingulis diebus tum fundendis Deo precibus, tum au-' diendis dei præconiis, erant assignata tempora, milites ' ipsos adeò modestos, nihilque nisi Deum, pietatem, religionem, virtutem respirantes, ut ingenuè fatear e cum stupore non mediocri sæpè suspexi. Atque ne e putet hic aliquis velle me blandiri, oleum Olivario divendere, vel in illius aures instillare, testem Deum ' adhibee, quod sæpissime præsidiarios Olivarii, modô ' fuprà dictò milites adiens, ne vel inverecundum verbulum unquam ab ullius ex illis ore perceperim, jus-' jurandumque nullum, sed meram humanitatem, ur-' banitatem, pietatem, verecundiam, modestiam ani-· madverteriin. Unde nequaquam in Olivarii militibus packed up the same, but were prevented from sending it, by the diligence of Oliver, who

- c locum habere potest quod de omnibus aliis jampridem decantatum est,
 - ' Nulla fides pietasquè viris qui castra sequuntur,

' Sed de illis dicendum potius est,

'Multa fides pietasque viris qui castra sequuntur (z).'

(æ) Parallelum Olivæ nec non Olivarni per Lud. de Gand. Dom. de Brachey, &c. c. Vond. 1656.

Warwick, speaking of his army says, sthey had all either naturally the phanatick humour, or foon imbibed it: a herd of this fort of men being by him drawn together, he --- made use of the zeal and credulity of those persons, teaching them, as they too readily taught themselves, that they engaged for God, when he led them against his vicegerent the King: and where this opinion met with a natural courage, it made them the bolder, and too oftner the crueller: for it was fuch a fort of men, as killed brave ' young Cavendish and many others, after quarter given ' in cold blood.' And these men, habited more to spiritual pride, than carnal riot or intemperance, fo confequently having been industrious and active in their former callings and professions, where natural courage wanted, zeal supplied its place; and at first they chole rather to dye than fly; and custom removed fear of danger: and afterwards finding the sweet of good pay, and of opulent plunder, and of preferment, fui-' table to activity and merit; the lucrative part made gain feem to them a natural member of godlines (a). Though many shades are thrown into Warwick's picture, it is still beautiful in comparison of 'a dissolute, undisciplined, wicked beaten army,' which Clarendon tells us the King's was, when Lord Hopton took its command: 'an army, whose horse, he says, their friends feared, and their enemies laughed at; being e terrible only in plunder, and resolute in running away (b). Such would not have been entertained by (b) Vol. iv. Cromwell. I shall close this note with the last writer's p. 729. character of Cromwell's army, given before both houses of parliament Sept. 13, 1660: I say Cromwell's army, for 'tis well known they were the same men, for the most part, who had been formed by him, and fought under his banners. 'No other Prince, fays the chancellor, in Europe, would be willing to disband such an army; an army to which victory is entailed, and which, humanly speaking, could hardly fail of conquest whithersoever he should lead it. - An army whose order and discipline, whose sobriety and man-' ners, whose courage and success hath made it famous and terrible over the world. His Majesty knows they are too good Englishmen to wish that a standing army should be kept up in the bowels of their own country; that they who did but in Bello pacis gerere e negotium, and who whilft an army lived like good hufbandmen in the country, and good citizens in the city, will now become really such, and take delight in the benefit of that peace, they have so honestly and (c) Lives of-6 fo wonderfully brought to pass (c). What an elo-the Lordgium, before those who were best of all able to judge vol. ii. p. of its truth and propriety! Nothing after this can be ad- 126. 8vo.

(a) Memoiss, p. 252. who on this, as well as other (R) occasions, shewed himself an active partizan. In the course

ded.

(R) They were prevented by the diligence of Oliver, who character is showed himself an active partizan.] I intend not to par given of ticularize the military exploits of Cromwell, they are the men in sufficiently known. Europe sounded with them; and matter of they will be long talked of. However, as this was his the Life of first exploit, it may merit some attention, as well as clarendon, vol. ii. p. 40. in the Querela Cantabrigiens, in the sollowing words:

Master Cromwell, burges for the town of Cambridge, and then newly turned a man of war, was fent down by his mafters above, at the invitation of his mafters

ben

course of the war he gave full proof of his bravery and good conduct: at Marsion-Moor he turned the fortune of the day, and there-

below (as himself confessed) to gather what strength he could to ftop all passages that no plate might be fent: but his deligns being frustrated, and his opiinion as of an active subtile man, thereby somewhat I haken and endangered, he hath ever fince bent him-' felf- to work what revenge and mischief he could sagainst us. In pursuit whereof, before that month was expired, down he comes again in a terrible mane ner with what forces he could draw together, and furrounds divers colleges, while we were at our devotion in our feveral chappels, taking away prisoners, feveral doctors of divinity, heads of colleges, ----' and these he carries with him to Lenden in triumph (d). This story is repeated by the editor of Dr. Barwick's Lond. 1685. life, but by the extract from the journals, in the foregoing note, it appears that his design of stopping the plate intended for the King was not frustrated, and therefore the former part of the story must be without foundation. May writes, that ' the first action Crom-' well undertook was to fecure the town of Cambridge for the parliament, about the middle of January. "Universities of all places were most apt to adhere to 6 the King's party, esteeming parliaments, and especieally this, the greatest depressors of that ecclesiastical dignity, in hope of which they are there nurtured: "Upon which reason they were packing up a large quantity of the plate that belonged to all the colleges, to fend it away to the King, which would have made a confiderable fum. This was foreseen by Cromwell; who by a commission from the parliament, and lord s general Estex, had raised a troop of horse, and came 6 down into that country, with authority to raise more 6 forces as occasion served; he came to Cambridge soon enough to seize upon that plate (e).'-What the quantity of plate in the whole was, which was packed up by obtained great honour to himself, and advantage to his masters. His courage not-withstanding has been called in question (s):

(d) Querela Cantabrigienfis, 8vo. p. 182.

> (e) Hiftory of the Pa"l'ament, b. iii. r. 79. Folio. Lend. 1647.

.

for the King, appears not: but the particular pieces fent from St. John's college for the purpose, amounted (f) Barto two thousand fixty five ounces and three fourths (f). Wick's Life, So that probably the whole was a good booty. But Cromwell seldom did things by halves. 'Whilst I was about Huntington, visiting old Sir Oliver Cromwell, his uncle and godfather, at his house at Ramsey, he told me this story of his successful nephew and godfon; that he visited him with a good strong party of horse, and that he had asked him his blessing, and that the sew hours he was there, he would not keep on his hat in his presence; but at the same time, he not only disarmed, but plundered him: for he took (g) War-

ont only disarmed, but plundered him: for he took (g) War-away all his plate (g). This was in character: the wick, p. uncle was treated with proper respect; the cavalier 251. prevented from doing mischief! Cromwell well understood his duty.

(s) His courage however has been called in question. It has been observed that there is no opinion so absurd as not to have been embraced by some men. The imputation of cowardice to Cromwell would not eafily have been thought on, by those who had seen or heard of his exploits. But prejudice works wonders, and in a trice levels or exalts characters in the eyes of even wife and understanding men. Lord Holles was undoubtedly of this number; but being opposed and oppressed by Cromwell and his party, he could fee nothing to admire, but every thing to blame in him. 'He engaged in a ' particular opposition to Gromwell, fays Burnet, in the time of the war: they hated one another equally. 6 Holles seemed to carry this too far, for he would not allow Gromwell to have been either wife or brave; but 6 often applied Solomon's observation to him, that the battle was not to the ftrong, nor favour to the man 6 of understanding, but that time and chance happened

4 to

I have no need to fay, without reason.— His success procured him friends and reputation;

(b) Burnet, ' to all men (h).' A fine way of levelling the acts of vol. i. p. heroes!-But let us hear Holles himself. 'However I51. 6 lieutenant general Cromwell had the impudence and boldness to assume much of the honor of it [the vic-' tory at Marston-Moor, in July, 1644] to himself, or e rather, Hered like, to suffer others to magnify and ' adore him for it (for I can scarce believe he should be fo impudent to give it out himfelf, fo conscious as he " must be of his own base cowardliness) those who did the principal fervice that day, were major general Lefly, who commanded the Scots horse, major general " Crawford, who was major general to the Earl of Man-' chefter's brigade, and Sir Thomas Fairfax, who, under his father, commanded the northern brigade. But my friend Cromwell had neither part nor lott in the bufinels: for I have several times heard it from Crawford's own mouth (and I think I shall not be mistaken if I fay Cromwell himself has heard it from him; for he once faid it aloud in Westminster Hall, when Crom-" well passed by him, with a design he might hear him) that when the whole army at Marston-Moor was in a fair possibility to be utterly routed, and a great part of it running, he saw the body of horse of that brigade flanding fill, and to his feeming doubtful which way to charge backward or forward, when he came up to them in a great paffion, reviling them with the names of poltroons and cowards, and atked them if they ' would ftand ftill and fee the day loft? Whereupon " Cromwell shewed himself, and in a pitiful voice said, ' Major general, what shall I do? He (begging pardon for what he faid, not knowing he was there, towards whom he knew his distance as to his superior officer) stold him, Sir, if you charge not, all is loft; Crom-" well answered he was wounded, and was not able f to charge (his great wound being a little burn in the ' neck by the accidental going off behind him of one

tation; but at the same time it was attended of his foldier's pistols) then Crawford defired him to go off the field, and fending one away with him (who very readily followed wholfome advice) led them on 6 himself, which was not the duty of his place, and as ' little for Cromwell's honor, as it proved to be much 6 for the advancement of his and parties pernicious defigns. This I have but by relation, yet I eafily beblieve it upon the credit of the reporter, who was a ' man of honor, that was not ashamed or asraid to pube lish it in all places. Besides I have heard a parallel flory of his valour from another person [colonel Dal-' bier] not inferiour, neither in quality nor reputation, to major general Crawford, who told me, that when Basing House was stormed, Cromwell, instead of lead-' ing on his men, stood a good distance off, out of gun-6 shot, behind a hedge. And something I can deliver of him upon my own knowledge, which makes paf-' fage for the easier belief of both these relations, and assures me that that man is as errand a coward, as he is notoriously perfidious, ambitious, and hypocritical. 'This was his base keeping out of the field at Keinton battle; where he with his troop of horse came not in, impudently and ridiculously affirming, the day after, that he had been all that day feeking the army and place of fight, though his quarters were but at a village near hand, whence he could not find his way, nor be directed by his ear, when the ordnance ' was heard, as I have been credibly informed, 20 or 30 ' miles off; fo that certainly he is far from the man he ' is taken for (i).' Mr. Walpole, referring to this paf- (i) Holles's fage, fays ' from the extream good sense of his lord- 15, & seq. 6 ship's speeches and letters, one should not have ex- 8vo. Lond. e pected that weak attempt to blast Cromwell for a 1699. coward. How a judicatory in the temple of fame (k) Carawould laugh at such witnesses as major general Craw- logue of roy-* fird and a colonel Dalbier! Cafar and Gromwell are aland noble not amenable to a commission of over and terminer (k). Authors, vol. ii. p. 32.

with the envy and hatred (T) of very power-

(T) His success was attended with the envy and hatred of very powerful persons.] The following passages will enable the reader to understand this. 'Colonel Cromwell being made lieutenant general of the earl of · Manchester's army, gave great satisfaction to the com-" mons touching the business of Dennington castle, and feemed (but cautiously enough) to lay more blame on the officers of the lord general's army, than upon any other. And the point of priviledge was debated touching the lords transmitting of a charge from them, be-' fore it was brought up to them. This reflected upon ' lieutenant general Cromwell, of whom the lord gee neral now began to have some jealousies, and was advised to put to his strength to rid Cromwell out of the way, and the means to be used to effect this, was fupposed to be by the Scots commissioners, who were onot well pleased with Cromwell upon some words which he had fpoken (as they apprehended) derogatory to the honor of their nation. One evening very late, Maynard and I were fent for by the lord general to Essex-house, and there was no excuse to be admitted, onor did we know beforehand the occasion of our being fent for: when we came to Effex-house, we were brought to the lord general, and with him were the ' Scots commissioners, Mr. Hollis, Sir Philip Stapyiton, Sir John Meyrick, and divers o hers of his special friends. After compliments, and that all were fet down in council, the lord general, in general terms having mentioned his having fent for them on important business; defired the lord chancellor of Scetland to enter into the detail, which he did in the following manner: Mafter Maynard and mafter Whitlick, I can assure you of the great opinion both my brethren and myself have of your worth and abilities, else we should not have desired this meeting with you, and fince it is his Excellency's pleasure that I should e acquaint you with the matter upon whilke your counpowerful persons, whom he soon got the better

e fel is defired, I shall obey his commands, and briefly recite the business to you. You ken vary weele that e lieutenant general Cromwell is no friend of ours, and fince the advance of our army into England, he hath used all underhand and cunning means to take off from our honor and merit of this kingdom; an evil requital of all our hazards and fervices: but so it is. and we are nevertheless fully fatisfied of the affections and gratitude of the gude people of this nation in the general. It is thought requifite for us, and for the carrying on of the cause of the tway kingdoms, that this obstacle or remora may be removed out of the way, whom we foresee will otherwise be no small impediment to us, and the gude design we have undertaken. not only is no friend to us, and the government of our church, but he is also no well-willer to his Excellency, whom you and we all have cause to love and honour; and if he be permitted to go on in his ways, it may, I fear, endanger the whole bufiness; therefore we are to advise of some course to be taken for prevention of that mischief. You ken very wele the accord 'twixt the twa kingdoms, and the union by the solemn league and covenant, and if any be an incendiary between the twa nations, how is he to be proceeded against: Now the matter is, wherein we defire your opinions, what you tak the meaning of this word incendiary to be, and whether lieutenant general Cromwell be not ficke an incendiary, as is meant thereby, and whilke way wud be best to tak to proceed against him, if he be proved to be sicke an incendiary, and that will clepe his wings from foaring to the prejudice of our cause. Now you may ken that by our law in Scotland we clepe him an incendiary whay kindleth coals of contention, and raiseth disferences in the flate to the publick damage, and he is tanquam publicus hostis patriæ; whether your law be 6 the same or not, you ken best who are mickle learned therein.

better of, by craft, diffimulation, hypocrify, and therein, and therefore with the favour of his Excellency we defire your judgments in these points (1).

(1) Whitlock's Memorials, p.

(m) Id. p. 327.

Whitleck in answer hereunto observed, ' that the sense of the word incendiary was the fame in both nations; but whether Crimwell was one depended on proofs; if proofs were wanting, he was none; if such were at hand, he might be proceeded against in parliament.' He moreover observed, that it became not persons of their honor and authority to appear in any business, especially of an accusation, but such as they saw could be clearly made out, and be brought to the effect intended. Cromwell's parts were then described; his interest in the house of commons, and even in the house of peers, and his abilities to manage his own defence to the best advantage. He advised therefore that the matter for the present might be dropt; that the proofs against him might be collected, and then they might confult and advise afresh. Maynard concurring in the same opinion, the affair was at a stand, and nothing came of it: 'though Mr. Hillis, and Sir Philip Stapylton, and some others, fpake fmartly to the business, and mentioned some particular passages, and words of Cromwell's tending to orove him to be an incendiary; and they did not ap-' prehend his interest in the house of commons to be 6 fo much as was supposed; and they would willingly have been upon the accusation of him (m).' This was at the latter end of the year 1644. Mr. W bitlock closes his account of this remarkable conversation with the following words: "I had some cause to believe, that at this debate, some who were present, were false brethren, and informed Cromwell of all that past. among us, and after that Cromwell, though he took on notice of any particular passages at that time, yet he seemed more kind to me and Mr. Mayrard than he had been formerly, and carried on his defign more (n) Id. ibid. c actively of making way for his own advancement (n). This was the fate of Cromwell: envy followed his great deeds,

the usual arts of men bent on defeating the de-deeds, and deep defigns were laid for clipping his wings, ere he feemed to have done any thing to have deferved fuch treatment. We need not wonder after this, that he opposed the Scots, Essex and Hollis, and that they entertained a deadly hatred of him. The charge advanced against Gromwell here, was that he was no friend to the Scots, and the government of their church, and no well wisher to Lord Esfex. The charge indeed might be true enough; though a poor foundation for a parliamentary profecution, at least if justice had taken place. Probable 'tis he thought the business in which he was engaged might have been done without the Scots; that they might bring about a peace in conjunction with Effex, very different from his wishes; and as for their church government, he, with many other sensible men, had a great distelish of it. 'Tis well enough known, that when the parliament applied for affishance to the Scots, it was granted among other things upon condition of their taking a solemn league and covenant together with the Scottish nation, whereby they bound themselves among other particulars, to endeavour to bring the churches of God, in the three kingdoms, to the near-'est conjunction and uniformity in religion, confession of faith, form of church government, directory for worship and catechizing. And in like manner, without respect of persons, to endeavour the extirpation of 6 popery, prelacy, (that is, church government by arch-bishops, bishops, their chancellors and commisfaries, deans, deans and chapters, arch-deacons, and all other ecclefiaftical officers depending on that hierar-6 chy) superstition, herely, schism, profaneness, and whatfoever shall be found to be contrary to found doctrine and the power of godliness. And they were also by the same covenant to endeavour with their effates and lives mutually to preferve the rights and ' priviledges of the parliaments, and the liberties of the ' kingdoms; and to preserve and defend the King's · Mafigns of their foes, and advancing their own (u); by deep diffimulation, I say, and his

(o) Parliamentary History, vol. xii. p. 397. 8vo. Lond. 1753.

Majesty's person and authority, in the preservation and defence of the true religion and liberties of the kingdoms, that the world might bear witness of their loy-' alty, and that they had no thoughts or intentions to diminish his Majesty's just power and greatness (0). This covenant was taken by both houses of parliament, Sept. 25, 1643, and all the officers of the army were flrictly enjoined to do the fame, as well as the people throughout the kingdom. Cromwell therefore mutt have taken it; but in the same manner as men take many other things, much against his mind, though he had art enough then to conceal his diflike: for it cannot be thought but it must be very disagreeable to him to be bound to introduce a discipline his large soul abhorred, and to preserve and defend a prince whom he was to fight against, and whose power and greatness were the objects of his dread. In short, Cromwell came not into the schemes of the Scots, either religious or political, and confequently was hated by them.

(v) By craft, dissimulation and hypocrify, he got the better of his sees.] No man was ever more taxed with hypocrify and dissimulation than Cramwell: his enemies were continually reproaching him with it; his friends could not deny it; and the truth of history requires it should be fully laid open. For every thing is useful: vices and follies instruct as well as virtues: though wise men only profit by them.—Let us hear the accusations against Oliver on this head. If craft be wisdom, says Mr. Gowley, and dissimulation wit (assisted both and improved with hypocrifies and perjuries) I must not deny him to have been singular in both; but so gross deny him to have been lingular in both; but so gross was the manner in which he made use of them, that

s as wise men ought not to have believed him at first, so no man was fool enough to believe him at last;

e neither did any man feem to do it, but those who thought they gained as much by that diffembling, as

he

his interest in the army, and the house of com-

he did by his. His very actings of godliness grew at last as ridiculous, as if a player by putting on a gown, should think he represented excellently a woman, though his beard at the fame time were feen by all the spectators. If you ask me why they did not his, and explode him off the stage, I can only anfwer, that they durst not do so, because the actors and door-keepers were too strong for the company. I ' must confess that by these arts (how grosly soever maanged, as by hypocritical praying, and filly preaching, by unmanly tears and whinings, by falshoods and per-' juries, even diabolical) he had at first the good fortune, (as men call it, that is the ill fortune) to attain his ends; but it was because his ends were so unreafonable, that no human wifdom could foresee them; which made them who had to do with him believe that he was rather a well meaning and deluded bigot, than a crafty and malicious impostor (p).' Another (p)Discourse writer who also lived in Gromwell's time, and wrote Oliver when he was in the height of his power, expresses him- Cromwell, felf in the following manner: 6 Had not his highness P. 88. had a faculty to be fluent in his tears, and eloquent in his execrations; had he not had fpongie eyes, and a supple conscience; and besides to do wit people of e great faith, but little wit : his courage, and the rest of his moral virtues, with the help of his janissaries, had never been able so far to advance him out of the e reach of justice, that we should have need to call for any other hand to remove him, but that or the hang man (q). And again—' He hath found indeed that (q) Killing in godline's there is great gain; and that preaching no Murder, and praying well managed, will obtain other king-p. 6.4.0.
doms, 1689 *.

^{*} Killing no murder has been almost universally given to Colonel Titus. But in a narrative touching Colonel Edward Sexby, [of whom there is an account in Clarendon, vol. vi. p. 640] who lately died a prisoner in the Tower, dated Jan. 20, 1657. O. Sit is said, 'that he owned the book called Killing no Murder; and said he was still of that Judgment.' See Mercurius Politicus, No. 399. p. 252. and Thurloe, vol. vip. 560.

commons, he got the better of all his foes; for doms, as well as that of heaven. His indeed have been pious arms; for he hath conquered most by those of the church; by prayers and tears. But the truth is, were it not for our honor to be governed by one that can manage both the spiritual and temporal sword, and. Roman like, to have our emperor our high priest, we might have had preaching at a much cheaper rate, and it would have cost us but our tythes, which now costs us all (r). These are general declamations. no Murder, Let us see what facts there are to support them. Lord Holles speaking of the mutiny in the army on account of fome regiments being ordered to go to Ireland, by the parliament, has the following passages: When "they [the officers] had wrought the feat, Sir Thomas · Fairfax himself came to London upon pretence of taking physick; Cromwell, Ireton, Fleetwood, Rainsborough, who were members of the house of commons as well ' as principal officers of the army, keep the house, that the foldiers might be left to themselves to fire the more, run up to extreams, and put themselves into a posture to carry on their work of rebellion with a high and ' violent hand, which had been fo handsomely done : for either they must have appeared in it, and joined with the foldiers, which had been too gross, or have flopped it in the beginning, crustied the serpent in the egg, which had been most easy, but was contrary to their delign. So now they give the business time to foment, and the rebellion to grow to some head, that afterwards when they should come amongst them (for they could not but expect the parliament would fend them down) they might feem to be carryed with the "violence, and to give fome way for preventing greater inconveniencies, and to keep them from extremities till the monster was formed, and got to that strength s as to protect itself and them, when they might without danger declare for it, which they afterwards did.

In the mean time disclaiming it, blaming the soldiers

(r) Killing

OLIVER CROMWELL.

for it was unfafe, as well as unpopular, to attack

at that distance (as Cromwell did openly in the house; protesting; for his part, he would stick to the parliament) whilst underhand they sent them encouragements and directions; for nothing was done there; but by advice and countenance from London, where the whole business was so laid, the rebellion resolved upon, and the officers that were in town so deeply engaged, that when the full time was come for putting things in execution, my friend Cromwell, who had been fent down by the parliament to do good offices, was come up again without doing any, and he ' who had made those solemn protestations with some great imprecations on himself if he failed in his per-' formance, did, notwithstanding, privily convey thence his goods (which many of the independants did likewife, leaving city and parliament as marked out for 'd. struction) and then without leave of the house (after fome members missing him and fearing him gone, had moved to have him fent for; whereupon he being, as it feems, not yet gone, and having notice of it, came and shewed himself a little in the house) did ' fteal away that evening, I may fay run away post down to the army, and presently join in the subscription of a rebellious letter (s).'-Burnet relates the following anecdote on the authority of Sir Harbottle Grimfton. ' When the house of commons and the army were a quarelling, at a meeting of the officers it was e proposed to purge the army better, that they might know whom to depend on. Cremwell upon that faid, he was fure of the army; but there was another bidy that had more need of purging, naming the house of commons, and he thought the army only could do that. Two officers that were present brought an account of this to Grimfton, who carried them with ' him to the lobby of the house of commons; they be-6 ing resolved to justify it to the house. There was another debate then on foot; but Grimft.n diverted attack a man crowned with victories, and ap-

it, and faid he had a matter of priviledge of the higheft fort to lay before them: it was about the being and freedom of the house. So he charged Cromwell with the delign of putting a force on the house. He had his witnesses at the door, and desired they might be examined. They were brought to the bar, and justified all that they had faid to him, and gave a full e relation of all that had passed at their meetings. When they withdrew, Cromwell fell down on his knees, and made a folemn prayer to God, attesting his innocence, and his zeal for the service of the house: he submitted himself to the providence of · God, who it feems thought fit to exercise him with calumny and flander, but he fubmitted his cause to him. This he did with great vehemence, and with many tears. After this strange and bold preamble, he made fo long a speech, justifying both himself and the rest of the officers, except a few that seemed inclined to return back to Egypt, that he wearied out the house, and wrought fo much on his party, that what the witnesses had faid was so little believed, that had it been moved, Grimston thought that both he and they would have been sent to the Tower. But whether their guilt made them modest, or that they had no s mind to have the matter much talked of, they let it fall: and there was no firength in the other fide to carry it further. To complete the scene, as soon as ever . Cremwell got out of the house, he resolved to trust ' himself no more amongst them; but went to the ar-(1) Burnet, ' my, and in a few days he brought them up, and forced vol. i. p. 67. 'a great many from the house (t).' In a pamphlet entitled 'A true narrative of the occasions and causes of the late lord general Cromwell's anger and indignation against lieutenant colonel George Joyce (sometimes core net Foice) who secured the King at Holmby,' reprinted in the eighth vol. of the Harleian Miscellany, we have feveral particulars, which shew how dextrously Cromapplauded as a faint and an hero, by the foldiers and the people.

Though

well managed his mask, and practised one of the ' maxims which the Devil, in a late visit upon earth, ' left to his disciples, which is, when once you are got up, to kick the stool from under you (u), ' After (u) Tom the King, fays this writer, was feized by Joice, notice was taken that Cromwell lifted up his hands in the s parliament, and called God, angels, and men to wite ness that he knew nothing of force's going for the Thereupon the faid Joyce asked Cromwell what made him to speak such words? And whether he ' intended to do as the King had done before him, viz. ' swear and lye? And bid him mark what would be " the end of fuch things; cautioning him to take heed and beware of fuch actions: but he flighted those warnings, and foon after flattered the faid Joyce again with tears of repentance. The faid Joyce protetting against the purging of the parliament, was threatned by Cromwell to be destroyed, and when he gave him reasons against dissolving the parliament he was very angry. Being about to buy Finkley Park in Hamp-" shire, and having generously offered to part with all or any part of it again to Richard Cromwell; Oliver took him in his arms, and told him that himself, and his fon, and family, were more beholden to him than to all the world besides, and therefore bad him go on and prosper. Upon this Joyce went the next morn-' ing about it, and there being a full committee [the Park belonged to the crown he was just upon the opoint of contracting for the faid Park, when on a fudden in came Richard, his father then overtopping ' all in power, with three lawyers with him, and re-* quired them to proceed no further in it, in regard it was his own inheritance, and no park, as was supposed. Whereupon Joyce informed the committee of the whole discourse that had passed between the ge-" neral, his fon, and himself the night before; upon 1 2

Though the parliament had in many places been

which he fell upon him in foul words; faying Sirrah, firrah, hold your tongue, or I shall make you repent the time you were born; which the committee perceiving, defired them to withdraw; and fince that time never durst meddle with the park any further. Whereupon, and his bearing testimony against Crom-" well's being made Protector, endeavours were used to ruin him. And to that purpose his lieutenant (who before had accused him, but could make nothing of it) was fent for by Cromwell, and encouraged to profecute him again, and contrary to the custom and · course of the army, privately appointed officers, and fuch as he could trust in such an affair, to take the · lieutenant's then deposition against Joyce: and they took his deposition, who swore falsly that he should hear him fay, that he was forry that Lockyer had not s pistolled Cremwell; and thereupon sent him to prison without bail, and order was given that he should be kept close prisoner, which accordingly was done; ' and afterwards cashiered. The lieutenant who had ' profecuted, applying to Cromwell for preferment as ' he' had been promised, was told that he had not dealt · like a christian with Joyce: he thereupon replying, he · had done nothing but what he had been commanded by him, was thrust out of his chamber by Cromwell,

• and bad go as a knave as he was (x).

(x) Harleian Miscellany, vol. viii,

> on this lieutenant general Cromwell pressed, that notwithstanding the unwillingness of the Lord Fairfax to command upon this occasion, they would vet continue him to be general of the army; professing for himself, that he would rather chuse to serve under him

I will add a relation or two from Lud'ow, who knew the man, and has drawn his character, in some things, with great exactness. Speaking concerning Fairfax's declining to command the army against the Scots, who were about to invade England in behalf of the title of Charles II. he goes on in the following manner: 'Up-

been fuccessful, the war was like to continue:

in his post, than to command the greatest army in · Europe. But the council of state not approving that advice, appointed a committee of some of themselves ' to confer farther with the general in order to his fatif-' faction. This committee was appointed upon the 6 motion of the lieutenant general, who acted his part fo to the life, that I really thought him in earnest; ' which obliged me to step to him as he was withdrawing with the rest of the committee out of the council chamber, and to defire him, that he would not in compliment and humility obstruct the service of the e nation by his refufal; but the confequence made it fufficiently evident that he had no fuch intention. 'The committee having spent some time in debate with the Lord Fairfax without any success, returned to the council of state, whereupon they ordered the report of this affair to be made to the parliament. Which being done, and fome of the general's friends informing them, that though he had shewed some unwil-6 linguess to be employed in this expedition himself, yet being more unwilling to hinder the undertaking of it by another, he had fent his fecretary, who attended at the door, to furrender his commission, if they thought fit to receive it; the fecretary was called in, and delivered the commission, which the parliament having received, they proceeded to fettle an annual revenue of five thousand pounds upon the Lord Fairfax, in confideration of his former fervices, and then ' voted lieutenant general Cromwell to be captain genee ral of all their land forces, ordering a commission forthwith to be drawn up to that effect, and referred 6 to the council of state to hasten the preparations for the northern expedition. A little after as I fat in the house, near general Cromwell, he told me, that having observed an alteration in my looks and carriage towards him, he apprehended that I entertained fome fuspicions of him; and that being perswaded of the H 3

this was occasioned partly by the strength of

tendency of the defigns of us both to the advancement of the publick service, he defired that a meeting might be appointed, wherein with freedom we e might discover the grounds of our mistakes and mise apprehensions, and create a good understanding between us for the future. I answered, that he discovered in me what I had never perceived in myself; and that if I troubled him not fo frequently as formerly, ' it was either because I was conscious of that weight of business that lay upon him, or that I had nothing to importune him withal upon my own or any other account; yet fince he was pleafed to do me the honor to defire a free conversation with me, I assured him of my readiness therein. Whereupon we resolved to i meet that afternoon in the council of state, and from ' thence to withdraw to a private room, which we did accordingly in the Queen's guard-chamber, where he endeavoured to perswade me of the necessity incumbent upon him to do feveral things that appeared ex-' traordinary in the judgment of fome men, who in opposition to him took fuch courses as would bring ruin upon themselves, as well as him and the publick ' cause, affirming his intentions to be directed entirely to the good of the people, and professing his readie nels to facrifice his life in their service. I freely acknowledged my former diffatisfaction with him and ' the rest of the army, when they were in treaty with the . King, whom I looked upon as the only obstruction to the fettlement of the nation; and with their actions at the rendevouz at Ware, where they shot a soldier to death, and imprisoned divers others upon the account of that treaty, which I conceived to have been done without authority, and for finister ends. Yet fince they had manifested themselves convinced of those errors, and declared their adherence to the com-' monwealth, tho' too partial a hand was carried both by the parliament and themselves, in the distribution the King; partly by the divisions in parlia-

of preferments and gratuities, and too much feverity exercised against some who had formerly been their friends, and as I hoped would be fo still, with other things that I could not entirely approve, I was conf tented patiently to wait for the accomplishment of 6 those good things which I expected, till they had overcome the difficulties they now laboured under, and suppressed their enemies that appeared both abroad and at home against them; hoping that then their f principles and interest should lead them to do what was ' most agreeable to the constitution of a commonwealth, and the good of mankind. He owned my diffatiffaction with the army whilst they were in treaty with the King, to be founded upon good reasons, and excused the execution done upon the soldier at the rendevouz, as abfolutely necessary to keep things from falling into confusion; which must have ensued upon ' that division, if it had not been timely prevented. He professed to desire nothing more than that the government of the nation might be fettled in a free and equal commonwealth, acknowledging that there was on other probable means to keep out the old family and government from returning upon us; declaring that he looked upon the defign of the Lord in this day to be the freeing of his people from every bur-& den, and that he was now accomplishing what was prophesied in the 110th Psalm; from the consideration of which he was often encouraged to attend the effecting those ends, spending at least an hour in the (y) Ludlow, exposition of that Psalm (y).'----Cromwell must have vol. i. p. had a peculiar knack at diffimulation, when he was capable of thus imposing on Ludlow, who had many times before found himself deceived by him! And he must have been a master in this art, who could still deceive. and still find means to be trusted by the same persons: as trusted he was by the republican party, and many other honest men, till he broke through all forms, and H 4

ment, and among the commanders of their armies;

boldly seized the sovereignty. The arts made use of to bring this about, will tend to heighten our idea of his capacity in this respect, and shew him in his true colours. 'Though ----- he eagerly coveted his own s advancement, he thought it not convenient yet to un-· mask himself; but rather to make higher pretences to honesty, than ever he had done before, thereby to engage major general Harrison, colonel Rich, and ' their party to himself. To this end he took all occafions in their presence to asperse the parliament, as not 6 defigning to do those good things they pretended to; but rather intending to support the corrupt interests of the clergy and lawyers. And though he was convinced they were hastning with all expedition to put a ' period to their fitting, having passed a vote that they ' would do it within the space of a year, and that they f were making all possible preparations in order to it; yet did he industriously publish, that they were so in ! love with their feats, that they would use all means to e perpetuate themselves. These and other calumnies, he 6. had with fo much art infinuated into the belief of ma-'ny honest and well-meaning people, that they began to wish him prosperity in his undertaking. Divers of the clergy from their pulpits began to prophecy the defiruction of the parliament, and to propose it openly as a thing defirable. Infomuch that the general, who had all along concurred with this spirit in them, hyf pocritically complained to quarter-master Vernon, that he was pushed on by two parties to do that, the con-· fideration of the iffue whereof, made his hair to stand s an end. One of these, said he, is headed by major ' general Lambert, who in revenge of that injury the f parliament did him, in not permitting him to go into ! Ireland with a character, and conditions fuitable to his f merit, will be contented with nothing less than their f diffolution: of the other major general Harrison is the chief, who is an honest man, and aims at good f things, armies; and probably also by a defire of things, yet from the impatience of his spirit will not wait the Lord's leizure, but hurries me on to do that which he and all honest men will have cause to re-5 pent. Thus, adds Ludlow, did he craftily feel the pulse of men towards this work, endeavouring to cast the infamy of it on others, referving to himself the appearance of tenderness to civil and religious liberty, and of skreening the nation from the fury of the par- (z) Ludlow, ties before mentioned (z). I have given these passa445. ges at length, to shew fully Cremwell's deep diffimulation. The reader may possibly be apt to ask, how these things were reconcileable with any real fense of religion, or common honesty and fair dealing? The answer is, that enthusiasm, to which Cromwell was subject, as I have made appear, is a very variable thing; it admits of much devotion and many crimes. Men who think themselves under the special and extraordinary influence of the Deity, attribute to him their feelings, sentiments and defires, and whatever proceeds from him, must be wife, just and good. And we are assured also, that 6 Cromwell and his adherents believed that there were e great occasions, in which some men were called to great services, in the doing of which they were ex-' cused from the common rules of morality: such were the practices of Ebud and Jael, Samson and David: and by this they fancied they had a priviledge from (a) Burnet.

observing the standing rules (a). Besides, we are vol. i. p. 68. to confider Oliver, as a politician, as a great man ' who 6 must be master of much artifice and knavery, his fi-' tuation requiring him to employ, and to be employed by fo many knaves; yet he must have some honesty, (b) Nature or those very knaves will be unwilling to trust him (b). and Origin of Evil, p. 150.

And 'tis not improbable Cromwell had learnt from Ma12mo.Lond. chiavel, whom he is by some faid to have been well read 1758. in, that men do seldom or never advance themselves from a small beginning to any great height, but by fraud or by force (unless they come to it by donation, terminating the war rather by treaty than the fword.—But things foon took a very dif-

or right of inheritance.) I do not think, adds he, any instance is to be found where force alone brought any man to that grandeur, but fraud and artifice have done it many times, as is clear in the lives of Philip of Maccedon, Agathocles the Sicilian, and feveral others, who from mean and inconsiderable extraction, came at length to be Kings (c). Accordingly the writers on

(c) Discourses on Livy, b. 2 c. 13.

flength to be Kings (c). Accordingly the writers on politics observe, 'that in the transacting of great affairs, the rules of morality admit of some relaxation; this is to be lamented, but not to be helped. Such frequently are the exigencies of a state, and such always the crookedness and depravity of the heart of man, that were you to deal openly, to tell all that you mean, all that you know, and all that you aim at, you would expose your country to ruin, and yourself to scorn, pethaps to the block. The most that can be done is to save appearances, and be wary of what expressions are used; for, upon these occasions, and many others, men are not to be upbraided for their silence (d). De Sois, speaking of the charge of horrible inhumanity

(d) Gordon's Discourses on Tacitus, vol. iv. p. 329. 12mo. Lond. 1753.

(c) History of the Conquest of Mexico, vol. i. p. 349. 8vo. Lond. 1738.

brought against the Spaniards, says by way of reply, 'We are not ignorant, that in some parts of the Indies, 'actions have been seen worthy of reprehension, in'deed contrary both to piety and reason; but in what 'just and holy undertaking, has it not been necessary to these writers, truth cannot be adhered to, at all times; piety and reason must be counteracted; and the necessity or importance of the end, render the means, be they what they may, justifiable! For my own part, I will not defend this reasoning. 'Truth is a sweet 'thing,' said some of the antients: and every good man is of the same sentiment; — 'Explica atque ex'cute intelligentiam tuam, ut videas, quæ sit in ea fpecies, forma, & notio viri boni. Cadit ergo in virum bonum mentiri emolumenti fui caufa, crimi-

different turn. The felf-denying ordinance (w) which passed the house of lords, April nari præripere, fallere? Nihil profecto minûs. Est ergo ulla res tanti, aut commodum ullum tam expef tendum, ut viri boni & splendorem, & nomen' amit-' tas? Quid est, quod afferre tantum utilitas ista, quæ ' dicitur, possit, quantum auferre, si boni viri nomen eripuerit, fidem justitiamque detraxerit? Quid enim interest, utrum ex homine se quis conferat in belluam, (f) Cicero an in hominis figura immanitatem gerat belluæ (f). de Officiis, i. e. Revolve and carefully examine your understanding, fest, 20. in order to fee what notion, idea, or representation of a good man you find there. Is it confishent with the character of fuch a person to lie for his own advantage; to calumniate, fupplant and cheat? Certainly, by no means. Is there any thing then so valuable, or any profit so desirable, as to make amends for the loss of honour and reputation in a man of probity? Can that, which we call profit, if it robs us of honour, justice, and the character of a good man, give us any thing fo valuable in their stead? For where, pray, is the difference whether one be actually transformed from a man into a brute; or, under the external figure of a man, carry with him all the ferocity of the brute? I will add no more on this subject, after I have observed, that fome persons will be apt to make allowances for the craft, diffimulation and hypocrify of Cromwell, from the times in which he lived, and the persons he had to deal with: times of trouble, confusion and difficulty, and perfons who, for the most part, were as little slaves to their words as himself. James I. Charles I. Charles II. and Moncke, to say nothing of a variety of others, acted the same part (but with less art, and worse grace) as he, though their praises have been high founded by fuch as have loaded Cromwell with obloquy.

5

(w) The felf-denying ordinance, &c. I This ordinance was a thing to specious and popular, and, at the same time, so mischievous and hurtful to the affairs of the parliament, that it deserves a very particular remembrance. It did more for Cromwell than he could almost have formed a wish for; namely, the depriving his enemies of all command, whilst he himself, by a very par-ticular fortune, obtained the highest power. In a word, it ruined them, and advanced him. After the army under Lord Effex had been in a manner ruined by the King, the general began to lose much of the esteem and reputation he had till then possessed. He was by many looked on with a jealous eye, and they were fearful he and his adherents were disposed to make terms with the King, which might be prejudicial to many who had engaged with them. In short, Esex and his party were accused by their enemies of neglecting, by vigorous operations, to put an end to the war, and of being inclined too much to his Majesty. --- 'There were some, says Whitlock, who had designs against 6 Esfex, and were defirous to remove him from his command, because they were jealous, that he was too much inclined to peace, and favouring of the King and his party. I think, I knew as much of his mind e as others did, and always observed him to wish for e peace, yet not upon-any dishonourable or unjust terms. He was a lover of monarchy and nobility, which he suspected some designed to destroy, together with gentry, ministry and magistracy, which humour ' then began to boil up; but he resolved to support them, and wanted not advice to that end (g). Ludlow, who was engaged in the opposition to Essex, will explain fomething more of this matter. The enemy, contrary to all expectation, appeared again in a body near Newbury, where our army lay, who drew out to oppose them. Some small skirmishes happened between them, but a general engagement was opposed in a council of war by some of the greatest among us: whereupon the King, in the face of our army, twice as numerous as his, had time

5, 1645, enacting, That no member of either

(g) Memcrials, p. 108. either house, during the war, should execute to fend his artillery from Dennington-castle towards Oxford, without any opposition, to the assonishment of all those who wished well to the public. But, by this time, it was clearly manifest, that the nobility ' had no further quarrel with the King, than 'till they could make their terms with him, having, for the most part, grounded their dissattions upon some e particular affront, or the prevalency of a faction about him. But though it should be granted, that their intentions in taking arms were to oblige the King to confent to redress the grievances of the nation, ' yet, if a war of this nature must be determined by treaty, and the King left in the exercise of the royal ' authority, after the utmost violation of the laws, and the greatest calamities brought upon the people, it 6 doth not appear to me what security can be given to them for the future enjoyment of their rights and pri-' vileges; nor with what prudence wife men can engage with the parliament, who being, by practice at leaft, ' liable to be dissolved at pleasure, are thereby rendered unable to protect themselves, or such as take up arms under their authority, if, after infinite hardfhips and hazards of their lives and estates, they must fall under ' the power of a provoked enemy, who, being once reestablished in his former authority, will never want means to revenge himfelf upon all those, who, in ' defence of the rights and liberties of the nation, adventure to refift him in his illegal and arbitrary proceedings (b).'-Such were the principles which difposed many at that time to wish for an alteration of men and measures; or, to speak more plainly, to put it effectually out of the power of those, who wanted net inclination, to conclude a peace with the King, on terms which might leave him in possession of the regal power. But to go on. - On the ninth of December, one thousand fix hundred and forty-four, the house of commons having resolved themselves into a cute or enjoy any military or civil offices

grand committee, to consider of the sad condition of the kingdom, by the continuance of the war, there was a general filence for a good space of time; many ! looking upon one another, to fee who would break the ice, and speak first in so tender and sharp a point: amongst whom Oliver Cromwell stood up, and spake, briefly, to this effect: That it was now a time to fpeak, or for ever to hold the tongue, the important coccasion being no less than to save a nation out of a bleeding, nay, almost dying, condition, which the 6 long continuance of the war had already brought it into; fo that without a more speedy, vigorous, and · effectual profecution of the war, casting off all lingering proceedings, like foldiers of fortune beyond fea, 6 to spin out a war, we shall make the kingdom weary of us, and hate the name of a parliament: for what 6 do the enemy fay? nay, what do many fay, that were friends at the beginning of the parliament? even this, That the members of both houses have got great oplaces and commands, and the fword into their hands; and what by interest in parliament, and what by power in the army, will perpetually continue themselves in grandeur, and not permit the war speedily to end, left their own power should determine with it. This I fpeak here to our own faces; it is but what others do utter abroad behind our backs. I am far from reflecting on any; I know the worth of those commanders, members of both houses, who are yet in opower; but if I may speak my conscience, without reflection upon any, I do conceive, if the army be onot put into another method, and the war more vigofoully profecuted, the people can bear the war no ' longer, and will enforce you to a dishonourable peace: but this I would recommend to your prudence, not to infift upon any complaint or overlight of any commander in chief, upon any occasion whatsoever; for, as I must acknowledge myself guilty of overas it obliged Essex, Manchester, Denbigh, War-

fights, fo I know they can be rarely avoided in mili-' tary affairs: therefore, waving a strict inquiry into the causes of these things, let us apply ourselves to the remedy which is most necessary; and, I hope, we have such true English hearts, and zealous affections towards the general weal of our mother country, as on members of either house will scruple to deny themfelves, and their lown private interests, for the public good; nor account it to be a dishonour done to (i) Parlia-to them, whatever the parliament shall resolve upon mentaryHisin this weighty matter (i).'—What the confequence tory, vol. of this was will appear by the following vote in the xiii. p. 375. journal of the day above-mentioned. . Resolved, &c. 1 That, during the time of this war, no member of either house shall have, or execute, any office or com-' mand, military or civil, granted or conferred by both or either of the houses of parliament, or any authof rity derived from both or either of the houses: and that an ordinance be brought in accordingly.' Mr. Sollicitor [St. 7ohn] Mr. Recorder [Ghn] Mr. Crewe, Mr. Pierpoint, Mr. Maynard, Mr. Reynolds, Mr. Ellis, Mr. Lifle, were appointed a committee to bring in an ordinance to the purport of this vote; and likewise for the continuing of fuch officers in their places as are no members of either house, until the houses take further order; and to bring in such clauses, as they shall think fit, for the perfecting of this vote. In the journal of the 11th of December, we find it 'resolved, &c. That a fast shall be appointed for this house to observe on Wed-" nesday next, to humble themselves for their particular and s parliamentary fins and failings, whereby they may hope to obtain God's bleffing in a better measure upon their endeavours for the future.' On the next day the lords agreed to the fast, to the day, and to the perfons. These were Mr. Marshal, Mr. Hill, and Mr. Obadiah Sedgwick. On this day also it was ordered by the commons, that the ordinance, for disenabling the members

Warwick, and other chief officers, to lay down to execute any office, should be taken into consideration, and read the fecond time on the next Saturday peremptorily. Accordingly it was then taken into confideration, committed to a committee of the whole house, and adjourned to the Thursday following. The fast accordingly was held before both houses, and the (k) Vol. iv. preachers, if we believe Lord Clarendon, played their parts to admiration (k). On the nineteenth the ordinance passed the house of commons (after having rejected the national covenant as a test for those who held or executed any office, as they had a clause before in favour of Lord Effex) and it was ordered to be fent to the lords, for their concurrence; and that all (1) Journals tent to the lords, for their concurrence; and that all of the house the members of the house do go up with this ordinance to the lords (1). From this short account of the progress of the bill through the house of commons, which I have compiled from the journals of that house, appears how absurdly Lord Clarendon has put into a speech; pretended by him to be made by Cromwell, the day after the fast, a desire, 'that an ordinance might be prepared, by which it might be unlawful, for any member of either house of parliament, to hold any office of command in the army, or any place or employment in the state (m): for it plainly appears, that the ordinance was ordered in the ninth of December; that it had been committed to a committee of the whole house the Saturday following, and actually passed there on the nineteenth of that month, the day after the fast; and, therefore, could not be defired at that time to be brought in by Cremwell. Chronological tables, duly consulted, wou'd have prevented his lordship from falling into many a blunder. But the truth is, his account of the management of this matter in the pulpit and the senate, seems, for the most part, invention, at which his Lordship had a very happy talent. - I have given Cromwell's speech above in behalf of this ordinance. I will add to it a speech of Mr. Whitlock's, as containing, for the most of commons.

P. 565.

(m) Vol. iv. P. 567.

OLIVER CROMWELL.

down their commands in the army (which was part, the chief arguments alledged by the opposite parties in the house, on this memorable occasion. 'Mr. Speaker, I am one of that number of your servants, who have no office or employment, but fuch as you are now about to except out of this ordinance, nor have ambition for any, and therefore may the more freely and indifferently, yet with all submission, humbly offer my reasons against it; as that which, I apprehend, may prove prejudicial to your service. It hath been objected, that your house, and the house of ' lords, is thin and empty, and you the less esteemed, having fo few members here, many of them being employed in offices, that they cannot attend the houses; but that, by this ordinance, they will be at e leifure and liberty to attend the service of the parliament here, and the houses be much fuller than now they are. I confess, Sir, this is fit to be remedied; but, I apprehend, you have a fitter way, than by this ordinance, to do it; that is, by iffuing out new writs for electing new members in the places of those who ' are dead, or expelled, and this will fatisfy the objection, and engage divers of interest and quality the more immediately in your fervice; whereas this ordinance will discontent many, and the houses will be but little the fuller by the passing of it. Another objection is, that, if this ordinance do not pass, the treaty for peace will not fo well proceed, and the particular interests of members of parliament may retard the fame; but will be all taken away by this ordinance. I am to feek how this can be materially obe jected, when I suppose, whether this ordinance pass or not, yet you intend members of parliament only to be your commissioners for that treaty; and, in case fome of them be officers, they will the better under-frand your businesses, on which the treaty will be grounded. Another objection is, that, unless this ordinance pass, the great work intended of new mo-· delling was put under the direction of Sir Thomas Fair-

delling your armies, will not fo well be carried on: for that, by putting all out, there will remain no exception. I should rather have argued, that, by putting out all members out of their employment, the exception and discontent would be the more gee neral; and, by leaving them still in their employments, there would be the less competition and follicitation for new officers in their rooms. Another objection or argument is, that the members of parlia-ment, who are officers, being of equal power in parliament, will not be so obedient to your commands as others who have smaller interests, and would not so much dispute one with another. Surely, Sir, those whose interest is the same with yours, have the more reason to obey your commands than others, and have more to hazard by disobedience than others can have; and, in your commands, all your members are in-· volved, and it were strange if they should be backward to obey their own orders. Nor will the contests be so frequent and high, between them and other officers, as it will be between those who will be of a 6 more equal condition. But, Mr. Speaker, as you consider the inconveniencies if this ordinance do not pass, so you will be pleased to consider the inconveniencies if it do pass. You will lay aside as brave men, and who have ferved you with as much courage, wildom, faithfulness and success, as ever men ' ferved their country. Our noble general, the Earls of Denbigh, Warwick, Manchester; the Lords Roberts, Willoughby, and other Lords in your armies, besides those in civil offices not excepted; and of your own members the Lord Grey, Lord Fairfax, Sir William Woller, lieutenant-general Comwell, Mr. Hillis, Sir Philip Stapylton, Sir William Brereton, Sir John Meyrick, and many others must be laid aside, if you pass this ordinance. And I am to feek, and, I doubt, fo wil they be, to whom you shall refer the new moFairfax) Cromwell seemed necessitated to refign delling of your armies, where to find officers that shall excel, if equal to these. If your judgments are, that, for the public fervice, it will be expedient to remove any of them from their commands, let the fame (if 'you please) be plainly made known to them from vou. Let them have what they deserve, your thanks for their former good fervices, and they will not be offended, that you, having no more work for them, 6 do lay them aside with honour. But to do a business of this nature (as hath been well faid) by a fide wind, is, in my humble opinion, not so becoming your hoonour and wisdom, as plainness and gravity, which e are ornaments to your actions. I shall conclude with the example of the Grecians and Romans, amongst whom, Sir, you know, that the greatest offices, both of war and peace, were conferred upon their fenators; and their reasons were, because they having greater interests than others, were the more capable to do them the greatest service. And, having the same in-' terest with the senate, and present at their debates, they understood their business the better, and were e less apt to break that trust, which so nearly concerned their private interests, which was involved with the ' publick; and the better they understood their business, the better service might be expected from them. Sir, ' I humbly submit the application to your judgment; ' your ancestors did the same; they thought the members of parliament fittest to be employed in the greatest offices: I hope you will be of the same judgment, and onot at this time pass this ordinance, and thereby to difonot at this time pais this ordinance, and thereby to difference courage your faithful fervants (n). This speech rials, p. had no effect in the house of commons. In the 119. house of lords, however, the ordinance went on very heavily; which occasioned the commons to fend fee veral messages up to desire the lords to expedite this ordinance; which being read by them twice, a conference was defired with the commons about it. And, fign his commission also: but, by a for-

I 2

' in this conference, January 7th, the Speaker of the · lords was ordered to deliver their reasons against pas-' fing it. Among others, it was alledged, that "the e putting every member of either house of parliament into an incapacity of holding military or civil offices, during this war, may be of very dangerous confequence; because, how emergent soever the occasion e may be, it cannot be altered without deferting of a opositive rule imposed upon themselves; yet; that the world, with their own consciences, may bear witness, that they are as willing as any others to facrifice, not only, their places and offices, but all that is dearest to them, for the good of religion and the kingdom; they are willing that all places, civil and military, shall be disposed of as both houses of parliament shall judge may contribute most for the good of the public, any crime or just exception being given against such as are onow intrusted with offices or commands: but that they can in no wife put an incapacity on themselves, and be made in a worfe condition than any free subject." After this they observed, "this ordinance deprived the peers of that honour, which, in all ages, hath been given unto them, whose part it was to be employed in military commands; that the case was not alike between the two houses, in point of excluding the members of both houses from military employe ment; that, by this ordinance, they are wholly dif-' abled from performing any military fervice, which is contrary to their protestation and covenant; and that the passing this ordinance, as to the military part, will produce fuch an alteration in all the armies, as, in apparent probability must be of very dangerous consequence to the cause in hand at this juncture of ' time; and therefore, till a new model be propounded to fucceed, they cannot but think the present frame better than such a consusion which is like to fol· low (0). These reasons operated so strongly with (0) Parliathe lords, that, notwithstanding a reply from the comHistory, mons, the ordinance was rejected, January 13. O. S. vol. xiii. though afterwards it was agreed to by them on the 3d P. 387. of April following: fo that Mr. Hume must be missaken much about this matter, when he fays, ' the peers, tho' the scheme was, in part, levelled against their order; tho' all of them were, at the bottom, extreamly averse to it; possessed to little authority, that they durst onot oppose the resolution of the commons; and they esteemed it better policy, by an unlimited compliance, (p) History to ward off that ruin which they faw approaching (p). of Great But 'tis no wonder this writer should commit many mis- Britain, vol. takes in his relation of this affair, when he profess i. p. 386. only to give a detail of the methods by which it was (q) Id. p. conducted, as they are delivered by Lord Clarendon (q) ! (9) --- While these disputes lasted, another ordinance was prepared, and, after fundry debates and amendments, agreed to by both houses, for new modelling the army, whereby Sir Thomas Fairfax was appointed general in chief of all the forces, with a power of nominating the officers under him, and execution of martial law. No mention is made of the King's authority, nor is any clause for the preservation of his person here inserted *; but power is given the general to 'lead his armies 'against all and singular enemies, rebels, traitors, and

^{*} The reasons urged by the commons against the clause of preserving his Majesty's Person, which had been insisted on in the house of lords, were thefe :

^{1.} Inferting it here must either suppose the King's coming in the head of an army, to fight against us, for the preservation and defence of the true protestant religion, &c. and so we must preserve him: or, if we suppose he cometh not to preserve, but to fight to oppose those (as we know he doth) it seemeth rather a mockery than a reality.

^{2.} That the King should not think us obliged, by our covenant, to preferve his person, if he appear in the head of an army against the par- (r) Journal, liament; nor the foldier to forbear his duty by reason of his pre-March 29, fence (r).

(s) Parlian entary History, vol. xiii. P. 437. other like offenders, and every of their adherents, and, with them to fight; and them to invade, refift, repress, subdue, pursue, slay, kill, and put in exccution of death by all ways and means (1).'-This passed the house of lords April 1. after the Earl of Esfex had declared he would yield up his commission, as he did the day following, as well as the Lords Manchester, Denbigh and Warwick very soon after - Thus almost all those men, by whose interest, power and authority the war with the King had been undertaken, and without whom no opposition, of any weight, could possibly have been raised, were, in a short time, deprived of their power and influence over their own army, and obliged, as we shall soon see, to truckle before them! So little can men see into futurity! so different are the turns things take from what men are apt to expect and depend on .- The felf denying ordinance was very specious, as are all bills for excluding the members of parliament, whether lords or commons, from places of trust and profit; and they are generally received favourably, without doors, by all ranks of people. Whether the enacting of them would be right; whether consistent with the liberty of the subject; whether they could be carried into execution; or, whether they would be productive of most good or ill, are distinct questions, which politicians will long debate on, and find difficult, perhaps, after all, to come to a conclusion among themselves. But, with respect to the subject now before us, it appears to have been a very dangerous experiment the parliament made. Here was an army put folely under the command of one man; a power granted him to give out commissions, and to order his armies in a good measure according to his own discretion. What was this but to put it in his power to give the law to the parliament whenever he thought fit? To depend on men's characters, in matters where the well-being of the community, and even the being of the parliament itself might be at stake, was furely a great piece of weakness, if such it can be called, and liable to very fevere censure. Soldiers soon forget to be citizens: they overlook, they contemn laws. The general is their fovereign, the officers their magistrates, and at all times they are at their beck and command. And generals, being used to absolute and uncontrouled command over large armies, are apt to forget also that they have any superiors. Hence the flavery of communities; the subversion of laws; the erection of tyranny, and every thing mischievous and hurtful to the human race. The following passage from Monte/quieu will properly close this note. 'It is a question, says he, whether civil and military em-• ployments ought to be conferred on the same person? In a republic, I should think, they ought to be ioined, but in monarchies feparated. In republics it would be extreamly dangerous to make the profession of arms a particular state, distinct from that of civil functions; and in monarchies no less dangerous would ' it be to confer these two employments on the same e person. In republics a person takes up arms only with a view to defend his country and its laws; it is because he is a citizen he makes himself for a while ' a soldier. Were these two distinct states, the person, who, under arms, thinks himself a citizen, would 6 foon be made fensible he is only a foldier. In mo-' narchies military men have nothing but glory, or at ' least honour or fortune, in view. To men, therefore, like thefe, the prince should never give any civil employments; on the contrary, they ought to be 6 checked by the civil magistrates, and care should be taken that the same men may not have, at the same time, the confidence of the people, and the power to abuse it. We need only turn our eyes to a nation [England] that may be justly called a republic difguised under the form of monarchy, and there we shall see how jealous they are of a separate state of the gentle-" men of the army, and how the military state is con-· stantly allied with that of the citizen, and even sometimes of the magistrate, to the end that these quali- (1) Spirit of ties may be a pledge for their country, which should i. p. 98. ' never be forgotten (t).'

8vo. Lond.

tune or art (x) peculiar to himself, he was

(x) By a fortune or art peculiar to himself, he was difpensed with paying obedience to the self-denying ordinance.] No man pushed more, we see, the passing of this than Cromwell. He declared it necessary to fatisfy the people, and to put an end to the war. Probably many honest men were induced to join with him in it, from these considerations. It could, therefore, never have entered into the heads of these, that the very same perfon should either desire or accept an exemption from a law, which he himself had moved for with so great zeal and earnestness. Nor did those who knew him to be a man of art, and were fearful of his devices, feem to entertain the least suspicion of him upon this head. So that his conduct was a masterpiece on this occasion, and shewed him more than a match for his chief opponents in the houses, who had too much openness, and were too little upon the referve to contest with him. Lord Hilles, after speaking of this ordinance, which turned out himself and his friends from their commands, and of the obedience * the army paid to the parliament, notwithstanding their love to their officers, whom they looked on as ill used for their services; proceeds thus: 6 the next work was how again to get in my friend Cromwell; for he was to have the power, Sir f Thomas Fairfax only the name of general; he to be the figure, the other the cypher. This was so gross and diametrically against the letter of the self-denying ordinance, that it put them to some trouble how to bring it about. For this Cromwell's foldiers, forfooth, " must mutiny, and say, they will have their Cromwell,

^{*} It appears, however, from the Journals of the house of commons, that many of the inferior officers and soldiers mutinied before the ordinance had passed the house of lords. In the Journal of March 4, 1644. O.S. is a declaration of both houses, promising parden to such as returned to their duty before the 15th of that instant, and threatning, in case of disposedience, to proceed against them as traitors and enemies to the commonwealth.

dispensed with paying obedience to it. He, there-or they will not stir. Hereupon he must be sent down they must have their wills. Yet for these very 6 men had Cromwell undertaken besore, when, upon debate, the inconveniency was objected which might follow by discontenting the common foldiers, who would hardly be drawn to leave their old officers and e go under new; he could fay, that his foldiers had learned to obey the parliament, to go or stay, fight or lay by the fword, upon their command; which, I know, prevailed with a great many to give their vote with that ordinance. By this trick a little beginning was made towards the breach of it, which was foon ' made greater. For they caused a report to be spread, ' that the King was bending with his forces towards the Isle of Ely, but none could fave but Cromwell, who 6 must be sent in all haste for that service; and an order of dispensation is made for a very few months, two or three (I remember not well whether) but with fuch protestations of that party, that this was only for that exigency, and that for the world they would not have the ordinance impeached, as Mr. Sollicitor faid; and 6 that if no body would move for the calling him home at the expiration of that time, he would. But all this was to gull the house. Mr. Sollicitor had forgot his protestation, and, before that was out, there is another order for more months, and fo renewed from time to time, that at last this great commander is rivetted in the army, and so fast rivetted, as, after all his orders of continuance were at an end, he would keep his command still, which he has done for seve-' ral months, and does yet, notwithstanding that ordi- (u) Mein nance, without any order at all of the house for it (u), $\frac{1}{34}$. Lord Clarendon's account of Cromwell's keeping his command is too remarkable to be omitted; not by reafon of its containing any fo extraordinary a matter, as to fhew how much his lordship wrote at random concerning the transactions of the parliament. By this

therefore, applied himself in good earnest

' felf-denying ordinance, together with the Earl of Effex, the Earl of Manchester, Sir William Waller, the Earl of Denbigh, major-general Massey, lost their commands, as Cromwell should likewise have done. But as foon as the ordinance was passed, and before the refignation of the Earl of Effex, the party that " fleered had caused him to be sent with a body of horse into the west, to relieve Taunton, that he might be absent at the time when the other officers delivered their commissions; which was quickly observed; and thereupon orders were given, to require his present attendance in parliament, and that their new general fhould fend some other officer to attend that service; ' which was pretended to be done; and the very day anamed, by which it was averred that he would be inthe house. A rendezvous was then appointed, for their new general to take a view of their troops, that he might appoint officers to succeed those who had left their commands by virtue of their ordinance; and · likewise in their places, who gave up their commands, and refused to serve in the new model, who were a great number of their best commanders. From this e rendezvous the general fent to desire the parliament, that they would give lieutenant-general Cromwell leave to stay with him for some sew days, for his better inforf mation, without which he should not be able to perform what they expected from him. The request feeming fo reasonable, and being for so short a time, s little opposition was made to it: and shortly after, by another letter, he desired, with much earnestness, that they would allow Cremwell to serve for that campaign. Thus they compaffed their whole defign, in being rid of all those whose affections they knew were not agreeable to theirs, and keeping Cromwell in ' command, who, in the name of Fairfax, modelled the army, and placed fuch officers as were well known to him, and to no body elfe; and abfolutely governed to the war, and increased the reputation he had already acquired.

His

the whole martial affairs, as was quickly known to all (x) Vol. iv. men (x).'—How many mistakes there are in the p. 629. above citation I need not point out. The attentive reader will foon discover them. In the Journal of the house of commons, February 27, 1644, O. S. we read the following resolutions. Resolved, &c. That lieu-' tenant-general Cromwell be desired forthwith to go down to Sir William Waller, to go with him upon this expedition into the west, for relief of Melcombe, and the garrifons and places adjacent, and for preventing and breaking the enemy's levies and recruits; and that it be referred to the committee of both kingdoms, to consider, this afternoon, of the disposing of the commands in such manner as may be 6 most advantageous for the service, and for accommodating all differences, if any occasion should be; and to accommodate him with what shall be further neceffary for this expedition this afternoon. Resolved. ' &c. That lieutenant-general Cromwell shall have liberty to take with him into the west his three troops that are at Henley, and that it be referred to the com-' mittee of both kingdoms to appoint three troops in the place of those three troops; and that lieutenante general Cromwell shall have liberty to take with him quarter master general Ireton. Ordered, That Mr. 6 Gossal and Mr. Lemman, treasurers for the Earl of "Manchester's association, do forthwith pay unto lieutenant; general Gromwell one thousand pounds; whereof five hundred upon his own account, and the other ' five hundred pounds to be disposed of as he shall think fit, to the pay of his own troops." So that Lord Clarendon probably mistook Taunton for Melcombe in the passage above recited. However, neither he nor his troops performed any fervice there; for, tho' Melcombe and other places were taken by Sir William Waller, yet, in the Journal of the house, March 20, 1644,

His actions, after the new modelling of

O. S. we read 'the humble petition of the foldiers of lieutenant-general Cromwell, acknowledging the heinoulnels of their offence in refuling to march with Sir William Waller into the west, was this day read: and it is refolved, &c. That this house doth accept of the acknowledgment and submission of the said sol-'diers, and do admit them into their former good opi-'nion and favour.' This, I suppose, was the mutiny referred to in the above passage from Lord Holles. For, though Cremwell was commanded to join Waller, I cannot find that he did:-he feems, about this time, to have been very active in the house, and zealous in the affair of new modelling the army. However, he foon after joined his troops; and the felf-denying ordinance having passed the house of lords, the army being new modelled, and Fairfax in supreme command, Gromwell, pretending that he was, with the other officers, to refign his commission, came to Windfor from his command in the west, to kiss the general's hand, and take his leave of him, 'when,' fays an historian of that time, greatly in the interest of Oliver, ' in the morning, ere he was come forth of his chamber, those commands [to e march beyond Oxford with a body of horse, and lie on the further side towards Worcester, to intercept a convoy going to Oxford, and to keep the King and his train from going thence] than which he thought of nothing less in all the world, came to him from "the committee of both kingdoms (y): whereupon, taking a body of horse and dragoons, he marched into Oxfordshire, beat a party of the enemy at Isip-bridge, reduced Blechingdon-house, and performed many other things advantageous to his cause. He continued, therefore, in the army, and was authorifed fo to do, as appears by what follows in the Journal of the house of commons, May 11, 1645: 'Two letters from lieutee nant-general Cromwell and major general Browne; the one of May 8th, the other of May 9th, informing, 6 that of the army, were worthy of a great

(y) Sprigg's Anglia Rediviva, p. 10. Fol. Lond. 1647.

that general Goringe is advanced westward, and the King northward towards Worcester; were this day read; and immediately delivered to Mr. Recorder, that brought them in. Ordered, &c. That the committee of the army do take care for the providing of monies and ammunition for those horse and foot, that are within the new model, and now under the command of lieutenant-general Cromwell, and major-general Browne. Ordered, &c. That it be referred to the committee of the army, to confider, what fums of 6 money is fit to be provided for that party of horse and 6 foot under the command of lieutenant-general Cromwell and major-general Browne, which is not within the new model. Whereas lieutenant-general Cromwell is now in the actual service of the parliament, and in profecution of the enemy; it is this day ensojoined by the lords and commons, that he shall conc tinue in the employment he is now in, for forty days Clonger; notwithstanding the late ordinance, or any clause therein, that discharges the members of either house from having any office or command, military " or civil.' In the journal of June the 10th following, it is faid, A letter from Sir Thomas Fairfaxe, and divers of the chief officers of his army, from Sher's s rington, of June the 8th; desiring that lieutenant-gee neral Cromwell might command the horse in chief, in Sir Thomas Fairfaxe his army, was this day read. Resolved upon the question, that Sir Thomas Fairfaxe be defired (if he thinks fit) to appoint lieutenant-general Cromwell to command the horse under Sir Thomas Fairfaxe, as lieutenant-general, during such time as this house shall please to dispense with his attendance: and that Sir Thomas Widdrington prepare a letter to be figned by Mr. Speaker, and forthwith fent to Sir. Thomas Fairfaxe to acquaint him with this yote.' The letter here referred to was figned among others, by Fleetwood, Whalley, Skippon, and Ireton, men near to Choutquell. commander, and at the battle of Nafeby well, and probably, not wholly ignorant of his defigns. But to go on .- On the 16th of June, when news had been brought the house of the battle of Naseby, we find it in the journal of that day, & Resolved, &c. That 5. lieutenant-general Cromwell shall be lieutenant-general of the horse, in the army under the command of Sir Thomas Fairfax, during the pleasure of both houses. The lords concurrence to be defired herein. Resolved, That lieutenant-general Cromwell shall have pay of fileutenant general of the horse, fince the time of the first establishment of the army, under Sir Thomas Fair -. fax's command. The lords concurrence to be defired herein.' However, in conformity to an alteration made by the house of lords, we find the resolution stand in the following manner two days afterwards. Refolved up-5 on the question, that lieutenant-general Cromwell shall 5: continue as lieutenant-general of the horse according 5 to the established pay of the army, for three months from the end of the forty days formerly granted to him. And on the 8th of August 1645, it was ordered by the commons, 'That he should be continued in the same employment, as formerly, for the space of four months s longer, from the end of the faid three months, for which he was formerly continued, as aforefaid; on the 17th of Oct. it was continued for four months Longer; and on the 23d of Jan. following for six f months, more. After this there were no more refolutions about Cromwell: he took it for granted he had leave; no one offered to move for recalling him; and he foon came to fo great a power, that no one with fafety could almost have dared to have done it. In fine, the felf-denying ordinance having answered its intention of turning out the grandees of both houses from their commands in the army, and Cromwell having the luck to be exempted from it, he accomplished what he then had in his view, and foon after, by means of his friends, had many chief officers of the army chosen members .:3

by (Y) he gave fresh proofs of his valour and bra-

of the house of commons, who took their seats and retained their commands. And thereby encouraged the old members of their party to provide for themselves likewise. Sir William Brereton, Sir Oliver and Sir Samuel Luke, Ireton, Rainsborough, Algernon Sydney, Ingoldsby, Ludiow, Skip- (2) See Walpon, Fleetwood (2), and other principal commanders, ry of Indevere members of parliament; most of whom were pendency, friends to Cromwell till he openly declared himself, and part i. p. some of them after that: whereby it plainly appeared to, Londs that, in his and their judgment, the ordinance was cal- 1648. culated more for party purposes, though carried on under specialized than for the public good.

der specious pretences, than for the public good. (Y) In the battle of Naseby he gave fresh proofs of his valour.] Though I proposed not to enter into a detail of Oliver's military exploits, yet I shall give the reader a short account of the important battle of Naseby, which is thus related by Mr. Whitlock. 'The King commanded the main body of his army, Prince Rupert and Prince Maurice the right wing, Sir Marmaduke Langdale the left, the Earl of Lindsey and the Lord Albley the right-hand referve, the Lord Bard, and Sir George L'Isle the left reserve. Of the parliament's army, Fairfax and Skippon commanded the main body, " Cromwell the right wing, with whom was Rossiter, and they both came in but a little before the fight. ' Ireton commanded the left wing, the referves were brought up by Rainsborough, Hammond and Pride. · Prince Rupert began and charged the parliament's left wing with great resolution; Ireton made gallant refistance, but at last was forced to give ground, he himfelf being run through the thigh with a pike, and into the face with a halbert, and his horse shot under him, and himself taken prisoner. Prince Rupert followed the chase almost to Naseby town, and in his return, ' fummoned the train, who made no other answer but by their firelocks; he also visited the carriages where was good plunder, but his long flay from the main. bravery. From this time the King's power very body was no small prejudice to the King's army. In the mean time Cromwell charged furiously on the King's left wing, and got the better, forcing them from the body, and profecuting the advantage, quite broke them and their referve. During which, the main bodies had charged one another with incredible · fierceness, often retreating and rallying, falling in together with the butt-ends of their muskets, and com-ing to hand blows with their swords. Langdale's men having been in some discontent before, did not in this fight behave themselves as they used to do in others, as their own party gave it out of them; yet they did their parts, and the rest of the King's army both horse and foot performed their duties with great courage and resolution, both commanders and soldiers. Some of 'the parliament's horse having lingred awhile about pil-"lage, and being in some disadvantage, Skippon perceiving it, brought up his foot feafonably to their affiftance, and in this charge (as himself related it to me) was fhot in the fide. Cromwell coming in with his victorious right wing, they all charged together upon the King, who, unable to endure any longer, got out of the field towards Leicester. Prince Rutert, who now too late returned from his improvident eager pursuit, feeing the day loft, accompanied them in their flight, leaving a compleat victory to the parliamentarians.'-After more particulars he closes his account thus: Both the general and lieutenant-general performed their work with admirable refolution, and by their * particular examples infused valour into their followers, fo likewife did the other officers, of whom divers were wounded. 'On the other fide, the King shewed himfelf this day, a couragious general; keeping close with his horse, and himself in person rallying them to hot [] Memo- encounters []. Hear now an adversary to Cremwell.— Very early in the morning [June 14, 1645] "the fcouts brought word that the King was making all 2 1 616 6 hafte

OLIVER CROMWELL.

very fenfibly decayed, and all things flowed in haste to the engagement, being falsly informed that Fairfax in fear was retreating to Northampton, where-' as he had now disposed of Naseby field, and awaited him, having Cromwell with Whalley on his right wing, ' and Ireton on his left, the one opposed to my Lord Langdale, and the northern horse, and the other to · Prince Rujert, general of the cavalry, the King him-' felf being generalissimo. To come to the event. Prince Rupert totally routed Ireton, who being engage ed and driven upon the King's rightmost foot, was there wounded in the thigh with a halbert, and taken e prisoner, and the field on that hand cleared; which Fairfax and Cremwell observing, having not yet stire red from their ground, Fairfax with a short speech encouraged his troops to the charge; which was feconded by fome devout ejaculations from Cromwell, who clapping spurs to his horse, fell in with Langdale's brigade, and quite charged through three bodies and utterly broke them; nor did he stop till with fine force he had likewise beat that wing from their ground, without possibility of rallying or recovering it again. In this action a commander of the King's knowing Cromwell, advanced finartly from the head of his troops to exchange a bullet fingly with him, and was with the ' like gallantry encountered by him, both fides forbearing to come in, till their piftols being discharged, the cavalier with a flanting back-blow of a broad fword, · luckily cut the ribbond that tied his murrion, and with a draw threw it off his head, and now ready to repeat his stroke, his party came in and rescued him, and one of them alighting, threw up his head-piece into his faddle, which Oliver hastily catching, as being affrighted with the chance, clapt it the wrong way on his head, and so fought with it the rest of the day, ' which proved most highly fortunate on his side (though the King most magnanimously and expertly managed the fight, exposing himself to the eminentest perils of

(a) Flagel-

lum, p. 37.

in very prosperously on the parliament, who

the field) and raifed himfelf beyond the arts and reach of envy, or his enemies of the Presbyterian party,

' who had so long been heaving at him, to out him of all military employments, which concluding fo pertinently and peremptorily for him in this grand event,

6 did charm the hatred, malice and prejudice against him, into fear and dread what this arrogance of ' his fortune would finally aspire to. This battle whol' ly overthrew the King, who was never after able to · make head against the parliament forces, but piece-

' meal lost his armies, castles and towns (a).' I have related this action as I found it, but must at the same time desire my reader to class it with the encounters of Quixet and Amadis; for like theirs it owes its existence to imagination, and is not to be met with in any writer of credit.

The three following authentic copies of original letters relating to this battle, will be deemed curiofities by most readers. They will do well to compare them with the narratives of modern commanders. In the year 1754, they were found in a wall nine feet thick, on pulling down a house in palace-yard Westminster, in order to build an office for the clerks of the house of lords. The public is indebted for the communication to an honourable gentleman, of distinguished rank in the republic of letters *.

* Horace Walpole, Efq.

> LETTER I. Indorfed, To the honourable WILLIAM LENTHALL, Esq; Speaker to the house of commons. Hafte.

Honourable Sir.

THIS morning by day brake wee marcht out Guilfburro, after the enemy. After an hours march we discovered their horse drawne up at Sybbertoff three miles this fide Harborrough, an hour after their foot appeared.

peared. This was about 8 in the morning, by 10 we were disposed into a battalia on both sides, both sides with mighty shouts exprest a hearty desire of fighting; having for our parts recommended our cause to God's protection, and recd. the word, which was God our frength, theirs Queen Mary. Our forlorne hopes begun the pla - - - whiles both fides labour'd for the hill and wynd, which in conclusyon w - - as it were equally divided. Our forlorne hope gave back, and their righ- wing of horse fell upon our lest with such gallantry, that ours were immediately routed. About 1000 ran along with them, but fuch was the courage and diligence of the right wing backt with the foot, that they not only brat back the enemy from the traine, but fell in with their ffoot, and after 2 hours dispute won all their ffield peeces, (of which some are cannon) most of their baggage, mortar peeces, boats, 3000 arms, much powder, match, &c. and nigh 4000 prisoners, their number was about 12000; some 600 slayne, many commanders of note. Of ours not above 200. Our horse are still in pursuit, and have taken many officers; their standard is ours, the Kings waggon and many ladyes. God Almighty give us thankful hearts for this great victory, the most absolute as yet obteyned. General, Leift. Gen. Cromwell, and Major Gen. Skippon (who is shot in the side, but not dangerous) did beyond expression gallantly; so did all the other commanders and foldiers. We have lost but 2 Capt. come late, be pleased to accept it from

Your Honors most humble servants,

Naezby, wher the flight was this HAR. LEIGHTON. Saturday, 14 Juni, 1645. Tho. HERBERT.

Capt. Potter is dangerously wounded, but hopes of his recovery, so is Capt. Cook.

Taring Carles of Strains

pared. ". 'e se mind e in the magain. LETTER II. Indorsed, For the honble WILLIAM LENTHALL, Speaker of commons house of parliament. Meife. 14' a. names and saw role was profiler, while it in wall aligh was BEING commanded by you to this fervice, I think myself bound to acquaint you with the good hand of God towards you and us. We marched yesterday after the Kinge who went before us from Daventree to Have browe and quartered about fix miles from him, this day we marched towards him. Hee drew out to meete us, both armies ingaged, we after three howers fight very doubtful, att last routed his armie, killed and tooke about 5000, very many officers, but of what qualitye wee yet know not, wee tooke also about 200 carrag - - all hee had, and all his gunns, being 12 in number, whereof 2 were demie cannon, 2 demie culveringes, and (I think) the rest facers. We pursued - - - enemy from 3 miles short of Ha- - - to nine beyond, even to fight of Leicef -- whether the King fled. Sir this is non other but the hand of God, and to him alone belongs the glorie, wherein non are to fhare with him. The general ferved you with all faythfulnesse and honor, and the best commendations I can give him is, that I d - - fay hee attributes all to God, and woud rath perish then affume to himselfe, which is an honest and a thrivinge way, and yet as much for bravery may be given to him in this action as to a man. Honest men ferved you faithfully in this action. Sir they are truftye. I befeech you in the name of God not to discourage them. I wish this action may begett thankfulnesse and humilitye in all that are concerned in it. He that venters his life for the libertie of his countrie, I wish hee trust God for the libertie of his conscience, and you for the libertye he fights for, in this hee rests whoe is

Your most humble servant,

June 14th, 1645. Haverbrowe.

OLIVER CROMWELL,

LETTER III. Indorfed, For the honbie WILLIAM LENTHALL, Efqr. Speaker of the hobie house of commons. าแล้ว ได้ส่วน ๆ คู่ ๆแล้ว ที่ที่มี อะไยไร้ 🕏

Mr. Speaker.

BESIDES the general account, I have alreadic given, by one of my fervants, whom I fent up to London yesterday, I thought fit to send the bearer Mr. Boles, whoe may more particularlye informe you concerninge the abundant goodness of God to this army, and the whole kingdome in the late victorie obteyned at Nafeby fielde. The whole body of their foote-taken and flaine, fuch a lift of the prisoners as could be made up in this fhort time I have fent, the horse all quitted the fielde, and were purfued within three miles of Leicester: theire ammunition, ordnance and carriages all taken: among which there were, two demy cannons, a whole culverin and a mortar peece, besides lesser peeces. We intend to move to Licefter as foon as we have taken order with our prisoners and wounded men. All that I desire is, that the honor of this greate and never to be forgotten mercie may be given to God, in an extraordinary day of thanksgivings; and that it may be improved to the good of his churche and his kingdome: which shall be faithfully endeavoured by, Sir,

Yr most humble Sert,

Harbirough, June 15, 1645.

THO. FAIRFAX.

Some Irifb are among the priloners, as I am informed: I have not time to make enquiry into it. I define they may be proceeded against according to ordnance of parliament. Major general Shippen was that throughe his fide; but notwithstandinge he continued in the sfielde with great resolution; and when I desired him to goe off the ffield, he answered he would not goe fo long as a man would fland, still doing his office as a valient and wife commander. Also Colonel Butler and Colonel Ireton, 10011 failed not to reward Oliver (z) for his good fervices.

K 3

upon theire first charge were both dangerouslie wounded, behaving themselves very gallantlie. If I could enter into particulars, much might be spoken of the resolution and courage of many commanders, both horse and stoote in this days service *.

(b) Vol. iv. p. 658.

These letters give us a clear idea of this important and decisive battle, a battle which in a manner extinguished the King's hopes, and soon after brought on a total reduction of his power! Lord Clarendon says, the King and the Kingdom were lost in it (b):—an expression which denotes his lordship's idea of the immenseness of the loss, though perhaps not much more exact than his account of the battle itself, which to say the least of it, is very desective and erroneous, as will appear by comparing it with the authentic accounts here given.

(c) See the fecond quotation from Milton, in note(o).

(z) The parliament failed not to reward Oliver for his good fervices.] Milton complains of the offices, gifts and preferements bestowed and shared among the members of parliament (c). And if we may believe a writer of those times, who had opportunity of being informed, (though allowances must be made for his prejudices) this was commonly and openly done, to the vexation of such as either could not, or would not partake with them. The passage is remarkable, and relates properly to the subject in hand. The leading men or bel-weathers having seemingly divided themselves, and having really divided the houses, and captivated their respective parties judgment, teaching them by an implicite saith, furare in verba magistri, to pin their opi-

^{*} Since the infertion of these letters, I find they were printed by order of parliament, June 16, 1645, and republished in Rushworth's collections. But as they are curious, little known, and probably now first transcribed from the originals. I have thought proper to give them a place in this work notwithstanding. A copy of Cromwell's letter is in the Printsh Museum.

fervices. But gratitude did not bind him;

inions upon their fleeves; they begin to advance their projects of monopolizing the profits, preferments, and power of the kingdom in themselves. To which purpose, though the leaders of each party seem to maintain a hot opposition, yet when any profit or preferment is to be reached at, it is observed that a power-' ful independent especially moves for a Presbyterian, or a leading Presbyterian for an independent; and seldom doth one oppose or speak against another, in fuch cases, unless fomething of particular spleen or competition come between, which caufeth them to break the common rule. By this means the grandees of each faction feldom miss their mark, since an Independent moving for a Presbyterian, his reputation carries the business clear with the Independent party; and the Presbyterians will not oppose a leading man of their own fide. By this artifice the grandees of each fide fhare the commonwealth between them: and are now become proud, domineering Rehoboams, ' even over the rest of their fellow members, (contrary to the liberty of parliament, which confifts in an equality) that were formerly fawning ambitious Abfalems. There hath been lately given away to members openly (besides innumerable and inestimable private cheats mutually connived at) at least 3000001. in money, befides rich offices, employments in money committees, fequestrations and other advantages. And those members who have so well served them-' felves under colour of ferving the publick, are, for the most part, old canvasers of factions, who have fat idly and fafely in the house, watching their advantages to confound businesses, and shuffle the cards to ' make their own game; when others that have ventured their persons abroad, laboured in the publick work, like Ifraelites under these Egyptian task-masters, and loft their estates, are left to starve until they can find relief in that empty bag called by fools, fides pubfor his fuccess and influence on the army, inspired

Mystery of the two Juntoes,

p. 2.

E lica, by wife men fides punica, and are now looked (d) Walker's upon in the house superciliously, like unwelcome s guests (d). 30 7 31 (194 1 3

Lord Holles in very sharp terms speaks of his antagonills, the Independent party, promoting and rewarding their friends and adherents: Which, fays he, was eafy for them, having both fword and purfe, and withfall an impudence and boldness to reward all those who would fell their consciences. For all such members of the house, and others, were sure to be preferred, have f large gifts given them out of the commonwealths money, arrears paid, offices confered upon them, counstenanced and protected against all complaints and profecutions, had they done never fo unworthy, unjust, horrid actions, to the oppression of the subject, and dishonour of the parliament. All others discountef nanced, opposed, inquisitions set upon them, questioned, 's imprisoned upon the least occasion, colours of crimes many times for doing real good fervice, and no favour Snor justice for them: only that the world might see 5 which was the way to rife, and which to be fure to meet with contrary winds and ftorms, and fo make sall men at least to hold candles to these visible faints (e). - In another place his lordship vindicates himself and friends from the charge of enriching themselves by difpoling of the publick money, and retorts it on his adversaries, setting forth in a very particular manner what fums of money they had received under various pretences, and what falaries they enjoyed (*). But after all these warm declamations, for both these writers were very warm, when they exercised their pens on these subjects, what was there done in these times that has not, that will not be done at all times? Friends and favourites are countenanced and preferred, enemies are overlooked, neglected, or disappointed. Was it ever otherwise? If men perform great and eminent fervices, 'tis grateful, 'tis politic to reward them. To complain of the givers or receivers, seems not very consistent with good sense and impartiality. Cromwell we have feen make a figure in the war: he had ventured his life many times in the public service, and had brought reputation and victory back with him. Was he unworthy of notice, or did he not highly merit it? When the house of commons was far enough from being wholly at his devotion, we find it ordered, ' that five hundred pounds be forthwith provided and advanced,—to be bestowed on Lieutenant General Cromwell, as a respect from the house. Or-' dered, that all the lands of the Earl of Worcester, Lord " Herbert, and Sir John Somerfett, his fons, in the county of Southampton, be fettled upon Lieutenant Gee neral Cromwell, and his heirs, to be accounted as part of the two thousand five hundred pounds per annum, formerly appointed him by this house: and that Mr. Samuel Browne, Mr. Sollicitor, Mr. Lifle, and Mr. · Wallop, do bring in an ordinance accordingly. Ordered, that it be referred to the committee of the army, 6 to consider how the residue of the two thousand five hundred pounds, land of inheritance formerly affigned Lieutenant General Cromwell by this house, may be fpeedily fettled upon him, and his heirs, for ever, and he put in the present possession of it; and likewise to confider of an entertainment for his present subfishence; (f) Journal, and to bring in an ordinance to this purpose (f). And Jan. 23. it was moreover ordered a few days afterwards, s that Mr. Lifle do bring in an ordinance for the full granting unto, and fettling upon Lieutenant General Crom-" well, and his heirs, the manors of Abberston and · I.chell, with the rights, members and appurtenances thereof, in the county of Southampton; being the lands of John Lord Marquis of Winchester, a delinquent, that hath been in arms against the parliament, and a (g) Journal, Papist (g).' What the event of this last order was I 1645. cannot find; but by the following letter of Oliver St. John to Cromwell, it appears that the house of commons had liberally rewarded him for his fervices.

(e) Me- . moirs, p. 36.

(*) Id. p. 132-133.

Deare Sir,

I Have herewithall sente you the order of the house of commons for settling 2500 l. per annum upon you and your heires, and the ordinance of parliament in pursuance thereof in part, whereby the lands therein mentioned, being all the lands of the Earle of Worcester in that county, are settled upon you. I have likewise sent you a rent-roll of the quit-rents. The manors consist most of old rents. There are three advowsons. I am told by Col. Norton and Mr. Wheeler, whose know the lands, that they are accounted 1001. p. ann. I endeavoured to passe this for the present, rather s than to have flayed longer to make up the whole. · Your patent was speedily prepared, and is this day e passed the great seal. I have not sente it downe, but will keepe it for you, until I receive your direction to whom to deliver it. The charges of passing the crdinances to the clerkes, and of the feale, my clerke of the patents hath fatisfied; you shall hereafter know what they come to. I delivered a copy of the ordi-' nance to Mr. Lifle to fend it to the committee of fequestrations, whoe hath, together with a letter to them, defyred, that the fequestrators take care that no wrong be done to the lands. That which principally ' moved me to it was, because I heard, there weare s goodly woods, and that much had been formerly cut, that for the future a stop might be made. By the or-' dinance fent you, you will be auctorized to fend fome bayliffe of your owne to husband the lands to your best advantage, which would be done speedilie. There s is another order of the house for preparinge an ordinance for a goodly house and other lands in Hampshire, of the Marquisse of Winchesters. Wee had thought to have had them in the ordinance, already passed, but by absence of some, when I brought in the other, that fayled. Perhaps it is better as it is, and that the addition might have flayed this. You know to inspired him with confidence (AA) and ambition, whome the Marquise hath relation *, and in regard that our commission for the seale ends with this month, I desyred rather for the presente to passe this, than to hazard the delay. Mr. Lisse was ordered to bring in the other ordinance; it is not yet done. Sir, Mr. Wallsp, Mr. Lisse, Sir Thomas Germayne, have been real friends to you in this business, and heartily desire to have you seated, if possible, in their country. Remember by the next to take notice hereof by letter (b) Thursunto them (b). I know not what the patent menloe, vol. is tioned in this letter means, unless the following resolution of the house of commons, Dec. 1, 1645, will explain it. Resolved, that the title and dignity of a baron of the kingdom of England, with all rights, priviledges, pre-eminences, and precedencies to the said title and dignity belonging or appertaining, be conferred and fettled on Lieutenant General Oliver Cremwell, and the heirs males of his body: and that his Majesty be desired, in these propositions, [for a peace] to grant and confer the faid title and dignity upon him, and the heirs males of his body accordingly: and that it be referred to the former committee, to confider of a fit way and manner for the perfecting hereof (i). Here are proofs sufficient of the bounty (i) Journals.

of Oliver's masters.

(AA) His fuccess and his interest in the army, inspired him with ambition, &c.] Sir Thomas Fairfax, we have feen, was constituted general and commander in chief of the new modelled army; and he behaved, as it is well known, with great bravery and conduct. But his talents were chiefly of the military kind. He had no inclination for intrigues; no ambitious views; and therefore stood not in need of those arts which are requisite to obtain considence and power. He contented

The Marquis of Winchester married the half-fifter of the Earl of Estex. Ludlow, vol. i. p. 158.

bition, and excited in him views prejudicial himself with discharging the duties of a good general, and troubled not himself with any thing beyond it-Crowwell had other things in his head. He fought not meerly for his masters, or out of zeal for the cause; though zeal he undoubtedly had; but that he might one time or other take the lead, and gratify his own boundless ambition. He therefore made his court to all the officers and foldiers, and became at length to popular, as to be looked on by friends and foes as the chief actor in the interesting scenes exhibited by the army. Fairfax was viewed as a gentleman of an irrational and brutish valour, fitter to follow another man's counsel than his own, and obnoxious to Cramwell and the independant faction (upon whose bottom he flands) for (i) Walker's his preferment, it being no dishonour to him to become the property of a powerful faction (k). But Gramwell was described as a head schoolmaster, in the parliament, (represented as a free-school when subjected to the will of the army) heton uther, and (that cypher) Fairfax prepositor (1). And Holles says, from the beginning of the new modelling the army, it was intended, by his party, that Cronwell should have the power. Sir Thomas Fairfux only the name of general.' And he further characterizes him, 'as one ht for their turns, to do whatever they will have him, (m) Me- without confidering or being able to judge whether moirs, p. 34. c honourable or honest (m). These characters of Fairfax feem very fevere, and one would be apt to think, ought to be read with some allowances, as coming from men heated with refertment, and foes to the general, and his army. But the following pallages from his own Memoirs, will shew us that there is much truth in what is above written, though couched in a sharp and adverfary-like style. His little influence and authority in the army over which he had the name of general, he thus describes. From the time they [the army] declared their usurped authority at Triplew-Heath, I never gave

History of Independenev, part i. p. 30.

(F, Id. part 16. p. 30.

-reli .

to the authority from whence he derived his power.

my free confert to any thing they did: but being yet undischarged of my place, they fet my name in way of course to all their papers, whether I consented or onot: and to fuch failings are all authorities subject. Under parliamentary authority many injuries have been done; so here hath a general's power been broken and crumbled into a levelling faction. Yet even this, I 6 hope, all impartial judges will interprit as force and ravishment of a good name, rather than a voluntary

confent, which might make me equally criminal with that faction. And if in a multitude of words, much of more in a multitude of actions, there must be some transgressions; yet I can truly say, they were never Memorials, defignedly, or wilfully committed by me (n).

This shews perfectly the man. Let us now proceed 1699. to view the ambition of Cromwell which had full scope for action under fuch a leader. Ludlow, speaking of the fituation of affairs after the King was delivered into the hands of the parliament's commissioners by the Scats, fays, Walking one day with lieutenant-general Cromwell in Sir Robert Cotton's garden, he inveighed bitterly against them, [the parliament] faying in a familiar way to me, if thy father were alive, he would e let some of them hear what they deserved: adding farther, that it was a miserable thing to serve a parliament, to whom let a man be never fo faithful, if one e pragmatical fellow rife up and afperfe him, he shall ' never wipe it off. Whereas, faid he, when one ferves under a general, he may do as much fervice, and yet be free from all blame and envy. This text, together with the comment his after actions put upon it, hath fince perswaded me, that he had already conceived the "defign of destroying the civil authority, and fetting up of himself; and that he took that opportunity to feel my pulse, whether I were a fit instrument to be employed by him to those ends. "But having replied to his discourse, that we ought to perform the duty

From .

p. 125. Sva. 1

power. For the war being ended in July 1646, of our stations, and trust God with our honour, power and all that is dear to us, not permitting any fuch considerations to discourage us from the prosecution of our duty, I never heard any thing more from ' him upon that point (o).' The same writer, after telling us that some menacing expressions fell from some members of parliament, on occasion of the officers of the army refusing to disband on their command, adds, Lieutenant-general Cromwell took the occasion to whisper me in the ear, saying, These men will never · leave till the army pull them out by the ears: which expression I should have resented, if the state of our ' affairs would have permitted (p).'-But nothing for fully fets forth the arts and ambition of Cromwell as a paper printed in Thurloe's correspondence, entitled ' Sundry Reasons inducing Major Robert Huntington to lay down his commission, humbly presented to the hoonourable houses of parliament.' It is long, but it would be a wrong to the reader as well as the subject to abridge it .- " Having taken up arms, fays he, in defence of the authority and power of King and parliament, under the command of the Lord Grey of Warke, and the Earl of Manchester, during their several employments with the forces of the eaftern affociation, and at the modelling of this army under the present lieutenant-general, having been appointed by the honourable houses of parliament, a major to the now regiment of lieutenant-general Cromwell; in each of which employments having ferved constantly and faithfully, answerable to the trust reposed in me; and having litely quit the said employment, and laid down my commission, I hold myself tyed both in duty and conscience to render the true reasons thereof, which in the general is briefly this: because the principles, designs, and actions of those officers, which have a great influence upon the army, are (as I conceive) very repugnant, and destructive to the honour

(e) Vol. i. p. 187.

" and

(p) Id. p. 189. 1646, the foldiery, instigated by Cromwell, refused and fafety of the parliament and kingdom, from whom they derive their authority. The particulars whereof being a breviat of my fad observations) will appear in the following narrative. First, that upon the orders of parliament for disbanding this army, 'lieutenant general Cromwell and com-' missary-general Ireton, were sent commissioners to Walden, to reduce the army to their obedience, but more especially, in order to the present supply of forces for the fervice of Ireland. But they, contrary to the ' trust reposed in them, very much hindered that service, not only by discountenancing those that were 6 obedient and willing, but also by giving encouragee ment to the unwilling and disobedient, declaring that there had lately been much cruelty and injustice in the ' parliament's proceedings against them, meaning the army. And commissary-general Ireton, in further purfuance thereof, framed those papers and writings then fent from the army to the parliament and kingdom, faying also to the agitators, that it was then lawful and fit for us to deny difbanding, 'till we had received equal and full satisfaction for our past service : lieutenant-general Cromwell further adding, that we were in a double capacity, as foldiers, and as commoners. And when upon the rendezvous at Triplow-heath, the commissioners of parliament, according to their orders, acquainted every regiment with what the pare liament had already done, and would further do, in order to the defires of the army, the foldiers being before prepared, and notwithstanding any thing could be faid or offered to them by the commissioners, they fill cried out for Justice, Justice. And for the efe fecting of their further purposes, advice was given by · lieutenant-general Cromwell and commissary-general ' Ireton, to remove the King's person from Holdenby, or to fecure him there by other guards than those anpointed by the commissioners of parliament; which refused to disband, or be sent into Ireland, though was thought most fit to be carried on by the private foldiery of the army, and promoted by the agitators of each regiment, whose first business was to secure the garrison of Oxford, with the guns and ammunition there; from thence to march to Holdenby, in profecution of the former advice; which was accordingly acted by cornet Joyce, who when he had done the business, sent a letter to the general then at Keinton, acquainting his excellency, that the King was on his march towards Newmarket. The general being troubled thereat, told commissary-general Ireion, that he did not like it, demanding withall who gave those orders. He replied, that he gave orders only for fecuring the King there, and not for taking him away from thence. Lieutenant-general Cromwell coming then from London, faid, if this had not been done, the King would have been fetched away by order of parliament; or elfe colonel Graves by the advice of the commissioners would have carried him to Lon-. don, throwing themselves upon the favour of parliament for that service. The same day cornet Joyce being told the general was displeased with him for bringing the King from Holdenby, he answered that · lieutenant-general Cromwell gave him orders at London, to do what he had done both there and at Oxford. · The person of the King being now in the power of the army, the business of lieutenant-general Cromwell was to court his Majesty (both by members of the army, and several gentlemen formerly in the King's service) into a good opinion and belief of the proceedings of the army, as also into a disaffection and dislike of the proceedings of parliament; pretending to shew that his Majesties interests would far better suit with the principles of Independency, than of Presbytery. And when the King did alledge, (as many times he did) that the power of parliament was the power, by which we fought, lieutenant-general Cronwell would though commanded by the parliament; erected reply, that we were not only foldiers, but commoners; promifing that the army would be for the King in the fettlement of his whole business, if the King and his e party would sit still, and not declare nor act against the army, but give them leave only to manage the present business in hand.

'That when the King was at Newmarket, the pare liament thought fit to fend to his Majesty, humbly. defiring, that, in order to his fafety and their addreffes for a speedy settlement, he would be pleased to come 6 to Richmond. Contrary hereunto, resolution was taken by the aforesaid officers of the army, that if the 'King would not be diverted by perswasion (to which his Majesty was very opposite) that then they would flop him by force at Ros flon, where his Majesty was to lodge the first night, keeping accordingly continual guard upon him, against any power that should be sent by order of parliament to take him from us: and to this purpose out-guards were also kept to prevent his escape from us with the commissioners, of whom we 6 had special orders given to be careful, for that they did daily shew a dislike to the present proceedings of the army against the parliament, and that the King was most conversant and private in discourse with them, his Majesty saying, that if any man should hinder his going (now his houses had defired him upon ' his late message of 12 May, 1647) it should be done by force, and laying hold on his bridle; which if any were fo bold to do, he would endeavour to make it his last. But contrary to his Majesties expectation, the e next morning when the King and the officers of the army were putting this to an issue, came the votes of both houses to the King of their compliance with that which the army formerly defired. After which his ' Majesty did incline to hearken to the desires of the army, and not before. Whereerected a council of officers and agitators,

Whereupon at Caversham, the King was continually follicited by messengers from lieutenant general Cromwell and commissary general Ireton, prosfering any thing his Majesty should desire, as revenues, chap-Iains, wife, children, fervants of his own, visitation of friends, access of letters, and (by commissary-ge-" neral Ireton) that his negative voice should not be meddled withal, and that he had convinced those that reasoned against it at a general council of the army; and all this they would do, that his Majesty might the better see into all our actions, and know our princi-' ples, which lead us to give him all these things out of conscience; for that we were not a people hating his · Majesties person or monarchical government, but that we liked it as the best, and that by this King; faying also, that they did hold it a very unreasonable thing for the parliament to abridge him of them; often promifing, that if his Majesty would fit still, and onot act against them, they would in the first place refore him to all these, and upon the settlement of our own just rights and liberties, make him the most glo-· rious prince in Christendom. That to this purpose, for a fettlement they were making feveral propofals, to be offered to the commissioners of parliament then fent down to the army, which should be as bounds for our party as to the King's business; and that his · Majesty should have liberty to get as much of these abated as he could, for that many things therein were proposed only to give satisfaction to others, who were our friends; promising the King, that at the same time the commissioners of parliament should see these proposals, his Majesty should have a copy of them also, pretending to carry a very equal hand between King and parliament, in order to the settlement of the kingdom by him; which besides their own judg-" ments and conscience, they did see a necessity of it as to consult of and manage their affairs;

to the people; commissary-general Iveton further saying, that what was offered in these proposals should be so just and reasonable, that if there were but six men in the kingdom that would fight to make them
good, he would make the seventh against any power, that should oppose them.

' The head quarters being removed from Reading to Bedford, his Majesty to Woburne, the proposals were given to me by commissary general Ireton, to present to the King; which his Majesty having read, told e me, that he would never treat with army or parliament upon these proposals, as he was then minded. But the next day his Majesty understanding, that a force was put on his houses of parliament, by a tu-' mult, fent for me again, and faid unto me : Go along with Sir Jo. Berkely to your general and lieutenante general, and tell them, that to avoid a new war, I will now treat with them upon their proposals, or any thing elfe, in order to a peace: only let me be faved in honor and conscience. Sir Jo. Berkely falling fick by the way, I delivered this message to the lieutenante general and to commissary general Iriton, who ad-' vised me not to acquaint the general with it, till ten or twelve officers of the army were met together at the general's quarters, and then they would bethink themselves of some persons to be sent to the King about it. And accordingly commissary-general Ireton, ' colonel Rainsborow, colonel Hammond, and colonel Rich, attended the King at Weburne for three house ' together, debating the whole business with the King, upon the propofals; upon which debate, many of the most material things the King disliked, were afterwards ftruck out, and many other things much abated by ' promises; whereupon his Majesty was pretty well sa-' tisfied. Within a day or two after this, his Majesty removed to Stoke, and there calling for me, told me, "he feared an engagement between the city and the L 2

talked infolently of, and petitioned rudely

army, faying, he had not time to write any thing under his hand, but would fend it to the general after 6 me; commanding me to tell commissary-general Ireton, with whom he had formerly treated upon the ' proposals, that he would wholly throw himself upon us, and trust us for a settlement of the kingdom, as we had promised; saying, if we proved honest men, we should without question make the kingdom happy, ' and fave much shedding of blood. This message from his Majesty I delivered to commissary-general Ireton, at Colebrooke, who seemed to receive it with joy, say-' ing, that we should be the veriest knaves that ever ' lived, if in every thing we made not good whatever we had promifed, because the King, by his not declaring against us, had given us great advantage against our adversaries. After our marching through London · with the army, his Majesty being at Hampton-Court, ' lieutenant-general Cromwell and commissary-general ' Ireton fent the King word feveral times, that the rea-' fon why they made no more hafte in his business was, because the party, which did then sit in the house, ' (while Pelham was speaker) did much obstruct the bufines, so that they could not carry it on at present; the lieutenant-general often faying, really they should be pulled out by the ears; and to that purpose caused ' a regiment of horse to rendezvous at Hyde-Park, to o put that in execution (as he himself expressed) had it onot been carried by vote in the house that day as he defired. The day before, the parliament voted once more the fending of the propositions of both kingdoms to the King, by the commissioners of each kingdom 'at Hamp on-Court; commissary-general Ireton bade me tell the King, that fuch a thing was to be done to-' morrow in the house, but his Majesty need not be troubled at it, for that they intended it to no other end but to make good some promises of the parlia-' ment, which the nation of Scotland expected performthe two houses; prescribed to them the terms

ance of. And that it was not expected or defired, his ' Majesty should either sign them, or treat upon them, for which there should be no advantage taken ae gainst the King. Upon the delivery of which mesfage, his Majesty replyed, he knew not what answer ' to give to please all without a treaty. Next day after this vote paffed, the lieutenant-general asking me thereupon, if the King did not wonder at these votes, 'I told him no; for that commissary-general Ireton had fent fuch a message by me the day before the vote passed, to fignify the reason of it. The lieutenant-general replied, that really it was the truth, and that we (speaking of the parliament) intended nothing else by it, but to fatisfy the Scott, which otherwise might be ' troublesome. And the lieutenant-general, and come missary-general enquiring after his Majesties answer to the propositions, and what it would be, it was · fhewed them both privately in a garden-house at Put-' ney, and in some parts amended to their own minds. But before this, the King doubting what answer to give, fent me to lieutenant-general Cromwell, as unfatisfied with the proceedings of the army, fearing they intended not to make good what they had pro-' mised, and the rather because his Majesty understood ' that lieutenant general Gomwell and commissary-ge-' neral Ireton agreed with the rest of the house in some ' late votes that opposed the proposals of the army. They severally replied, that they would not have his 6 Majesty mistrust them, for that since the house would ' go so high, they only concurred with them, that their ' unreasonableness might the better appear to the king-' dom. And the lieutenant-general bade me further affure the King, that if the army remained an army, his Majesty should trust the proposals with what was ' promised to be the worst of his conditions, which ' should be made for him; and then striking his hand on his breast in his chamber at Putney, bade me tell

L 3

4 the

on which alone, as they faid, they would return

' the King, he might rest confident and assured of it. And many times the same message hath been sent to the King from them both, with this addition from commissary-general Ireion, that they would purge, and purge, and never leave purging the houses, till they had made them of fuch a temper, as should do ' his Majesties business; and rather than they would fall short of what was promised, he would join with ' French, Spaniard; cavalier, or any that would join with him to force them to it. Upon the delivery of which message, the King made answer, that if they 6 do, they would do more than he durst do. After this the delay of the fettlement of the kingdom was excused upon the commotions of colonel Martin and co-6 lonel Rainsborough, with their adherents; the lieuteannt-general faying, that speedy course must be taken for outing of them the house and army, because they ' were now putting the army into a mutiny, by having hand in publishing several printed papers, calling them-' felves the agents of five regiments, and the agreement ' of the people, although some men had encouragement from lieutenant-general Cromuell for the profecution of · those papers.

And he being further prest to shew himself in it, he desired to be excused at the present, for that he might shew himself hereaster for their better advantage; though in the company of those men, which were of different judgments, he would often say, that these people were a giddy-headed party, and that there was no trust or truth in them; and to that purpose wrote a letter to col. Whaley that day the King went from Hanpton-Court, intimating doubtfully that his Majesties person was indanger from them, and that he should keep out guard to prevent them; which letter was presently shewed to the King by col. Whaley.

That about fix days after, when it was fully known by the parliament and army, that the King was in the

iffe

return into private life, and live as citizens and

' ifle of Wight, commissary-general Ireton standing by the fire-fide in his quarters at Kingston, and some speaking of an agreement likely to be made between the King and parliament, now the person of the King was our of the power of the army; commissary-ge-' neral Ireton replied with a discontented countenance, that he hoped it would be fuch a peace as we might with a good conscience fight against them both. Thus they, who at the first taking the King from Holdenby into the power of the army, cried down presbyterian ' government, the proceedings of this present parlia-' ment, and their perpetuity, and instead thereof held forth an earnest inclination to a moderated episcopacy, with a new election of members to fit in parliament for the speedy settlement of the kingdom; and ' afterwards when the eleven members had left the house, and the marching through London with the army, the ' feven lords impeached, the four aldermen of London committed to the Tower, and other citizens committed e also, then again they cried up presbyterian government, the perpetuity of this present parliament, lieutenant general Cromwell farther pleasing himself with the great fums of money, which were in arrears from each county to the army, and the taxes of 60,000 l. ' per month for our maintenance. Now, faith he, we ' may be, for ought I know, an army as long as we live. And fince the fending for the orders of parliament for ' the calling of their members together, lieutenant-ge-' neral Cromwell perceiving the houses would not anfwer his expectation, he is now again uttering words e perswading the hearers to a prejudice against proceedings of parliament, again crying down the prefbyterian government, fetting up a fingle interest, which ' he calls an honest interest, and that we have done ill in forfaking it. To this purpose it was lately thought fit, to put the army upon chusing new agitators, and to draw forth of the houses of parliament 60 or 70. LA and subjects; and even compelled the parliament, by whose authority they had been raised,

of the members thereof, much agreeing with his words he spake formerly in his chamber at Kingston, saying, What a sway Stopelton and Holles had heretofore in ' the kingdom, and he knew nothing to the contrary, but that he was as well able to govern the kingdom as either of them; fo that, in all his discourse, no-' thing more appeareth, than his feeking after the go-' vernment of King, parliament, city and kingdom. 6 For effecting whereof he thought it necessary, and delivered it as his judgment, that a confiderable part 6 of the chief citizens of London, and some in every county, be clapt up in castles and garrisons, for the ' more quiet and submissive carriage of every place to ' which they belong: further faying, That, from the r fing of the late tumult in London, there should be an eccasion taken to hang the recorder and aldermen of London, then in the Tower, that the city might fee the more they did stir in opposition, the more they fhould suffer; adding, that the city must first be made an example. And, fince that lieutenant-general Grome well was fent down from the parliament, for the re-' ducing the army to their obedience, he hath most frequently, in publick and private, delivered these en-' fuing heads, as his principles, from whence all the ' foregoing particulars have enfued, being fully con-· firmed (as I humbly conceive) by his practice in the ' transaction of his last year's business.

'1. First, that every single man is judge of just and

' right, as to the good and ill of a kingdom.

4 2. That the interest of honest men is the interest of the kingdom; and that those only are deemed honest men by him, that are conformable to his judgment and practice, may appear in many particulars;

to instance but one, in the choice of colonel Rainfbrough to be vice-admiral, lieutenant-general Crom-

we!

raifed, in whose name they had fought,

- well being asked how he could trust a man, whose interest was so directly opposite to what he had professed,
- and one whom he had lately aimed to remove from
- all places of trust? he answered, that he had now received particular affurance from colonel Rainsborough,
- as great as could be given by man, that he would be
- conformable to the judgment and direction of himself
- ' and commissary-general Ireton, for the managing of
- the whole business at sea.
- ' 3. That it is lawful to pass through any forms of government for the accomplishing his ends; and there-
- fore either to purge the houses, and support the re- ' maining party, by force everlastingly, or to put a pe- riod to them by force, is very lawful and fuitable to
- the interest of honest men.
- 4. That it is lawful to play the knave with a knave.
- 'These gentlemen aforesaid in the army, thus princi-
- pled, and (as by many other circumstances might ap-
- e pear) acting accordingly, give too much cause to bee lieve, that the success which may be obtained by the
- army (except timely prevented by the wisdom of the
- parliament) will be made use of to the destroying of
- all that power, for which we first engaged; and hav-
- ing, for above these twelve months past (fadly and
- with much reluctance) observed these several passages aforesaid, yet with some hopes, that at length there
- ' might be a returning to the obedience of parliament;
- and, contrary hereunto, knowing that resolutions were
- taken up, that, in case the power of parliament can-
- onot be gained to countenance their defigns, then to
- ' proceed without it: I, therefore, choose to quit my-
- ' felf of my command, wherein I have served the parliament these five years last past, and put myself upon
- the greatest hazard by discovering these truths, rather
- than, by hopes of gain, with a troubled mind, con-

4 tinuc

and by whom they had been paid, to erafe out

tinue an abettor or affiftant of fuch as give affronts to the parliament and kingdom, by abusing their power and authority, to carry on their particular defigns. against whom, in the midst of danger, I shall ever e aver the truth of this narrative, and myself to be a (9) Thurloe, constant, faithful and obedient servant to the parliament of England (q).

vol. i. p. 94.

ROB. HUNTINGTON.

Aug. 2, 1648.

This paper fully manifests the principles and the ambition of Cromwell; and is written with fuch a spirit and (r) Memoair of truth, as strongly inclines one to believe it. Mr. rials, p. Whitlock tells us, it was confirmed by Huntington, on 327. oath, in the house of lords (r), though no mention is at all made of it in the Journals of the house of commons. This may probably be accounted for by the following passages in one of the weekly writers of that time. 'He [Huntington] endeavoured likewise to present it to the commons, but (such is the terror of that huge trifle, or idol of the faction) that none would be feen to · move in the house; which being perceived by the major, he made bold to present it to Mr. Speaker's own felf, who, being a new creature of Oliver's, of about a twelvemonth's standing, durst not countenance fuch a piece of blasphemy against his creator; so that, at length, the major went and tendered it to Mr. Ber-(1) Mercu- 6 ket, the ferjeant at arms: but he, being of the fame ' temper with his good masters, told him, he had no-' thing to fay to it (s).' This is remarkable. Mr. Ludl.w, perhaps, will give us the reason of it.

rius Pragmaticus, Aug. 1-3. 1643.

e affairs (the insurrection in Wales, and the motions in Scotland in behalf of the King) necessitated the par-

Iliament to raise the militia, in order to oppose this mae levolent spirit which threatened them from the north,

and also prevailed with them to discountenance a charge

out of their Journals what was displeasing

of high treason framed by major Huntington, an officer 6 of the army, with the advice of fome members of both houses, against lieutenant-general Cromwell, for endeavouring, by betraying the King, parliament and e army, to advance himself; it being manifest, that the ' preferring this accusation at that time, was princi-' pally defigned to take him off from his command, (1) Vol. i. and thereby to weaken the army, that their enemies P. 253. might be the better enabled to prevail against them (t). It possibly, also, was not deemed fafe to countenance an accusation of this kind against the master of legions. However, in justice to the character of Cromwell, 'tis fit the reader should be informed, that Milton declares the whole accusation was owing to the hatred and malice of the presbyterian faction. Hear his words. 'Dum ' is communem hostem cum vitæ discrimine propulsat 6 hi [Presbyteriani] militantem pro sese & in acie sortiter dimicantem confictis criminibus accusant domi; 6 & Huntingtonum centurionem quendam in ejus caput fubornant.—Huntingtonus autem ille accusator, impunis & sui juris relictus, tandem pænitentia ductus, (u) Prose Works, vol. ' ipse sua sponte a Cromuello veniam petiit, & a quibus ii. p. 398. ' esset subornatus ultro fassus est (u).' -i. e. 'Whilst he staves off the enemy at the peril of his life, these ' [the Presbyterians] accuse him, fighting bravely for them, and amidst the very encounter itself, of feigned ' crimes, and suborn one major Huntington against his head.—And that accuser Huntington, unpunished and left to his own liberty, at length, ftruck with re-' morse, came of himself, and belought Cromwell's pardon, and freely confessed by whom he had been suborned.'—I shall conclude this note with observing (x) Wood's that Mr. Wood informs us, that 'major Huntington hated Athena 6 Oliver for his diabolical proceedings, and was hated by Oxonienses, him again fo much, that he imprisoned him feveral vol. ii. times (x).' This looks not as if he had asked pardon, c. 1174. and confessed his fault.

to them (BB), or contrary to their humours.

This

(BB) The foldiery, instigated by Cromwell, refused to disband, &c.] A good part of the proofs of this may be found in the foregoing note. But, as the testimony of an adversary may not be so satisfactory, we will give fuch farther evidence as is unquestionable. "Tis well known, that, after the decline of the King's affairs, through the valour and conduct of the new modelled army, he departed from Oxford in disguise, and threw himself into the hands of the Scots, then laying siege to Newark. 'Tis not unlikely his Majesty thought that they would have afforded him both protection and affiftance, as he well knew great debates had arisen between them and the English parliament, and that there was no love towards each other subsisting. In truth neitheir feem to have had any great cause to be satisfied. However, the King soon found himself mistaken. Though the Scots treated him with great outward respect, and spake him fair, yet they intended not to join. his party, or attempt to restore him to his former greatness, in opposition to the English, in whose pay, as well as alliance they were. They, therefore, perfuaded his Majesty to relinquish the few remaining garrisons he had lest, which, accordingly, he did, and to enter into a negociation for peace with his kingdoms. In a petition of the Earl of Leven, lord-general, the general officers, colonels, captains, &c. of the Scots army, presented to his Majesty at Newcastle, dated June 26, 1646, we have the following patiages: We do make it our humble address, and tender this earnest e petition to your Majesty in our name, and in the name of all the inferior commanders and foldiers under our charge, that your Majesty, in your wisdom and goodness, may be pleased to take a speedy course for fettling of religion and church government in this kingdom, according to the word of God, and examoples of the best reformed churches, and bringing the churches of the three kingdoms to the nearest con-· junction

This was but the beginning, however, of iunction and uniformity, and for establishing the privileges and liberties of your kingdoms according to the desires of your good people. We may not con-ceal our unseigned grief, for that your Majesty hath ' not yet been pleased to authorise and sign the coveannt, which, we are confident, would bring honour to God, happiness to yourself and posterity, and endear your Majesty, above measure, to all your faithful and loyal subjects; in the just defence whereof, as ' many of them have already loft their lives, fo are we ' Yeady to facrifice ours. We must also pray your Mae jesty to compassionate the distressed condition of your ' kingdoms, groaning under the heavy pressures of ma-' nifold calamities, occasioned by the continuance of this unnatural war; and to comply with the councils of your parliaments; that all differences being hapspily composed, and the armies in both kingdoms disbanded, we may return home in peace, or be difoposed of otherwise by your Majesty, with the advice of your parliaments, which may be most for your Majesty's honour and service, and the prosperity of (y) Parliathese kingdoms (y).' This address, which seems to mentary History, vol. have been very conformable to the fentiments of the xv. p. 13. then ruling party in Scotland, one would think must have undeceived Charles with regard to his hopes from this army. For the covenant, and compliance with the councils of parliaments, were grating founds in his ears, and announced the utterers far from friends .- What followed is well known. Propositions were fent to the King from both houses of parliament to Newcastle; long debates were carried on between him and Mr. Henderson concerning church government, and things still remained as they were. At length the controversies between England and Scotland were concluded by articles of agreement; whereby, on the payment of two hundred thoufand pounds in hand, and a promife of the fame fum hereafter, the Scots confented to quit all the places of ffrength

Hamilton,

p. 312.

that authority which they foon after acquired ftrength held by them in England, and return to their own country. No mention is made in these articles concerning the King's person; but the commissioners of both nations understood the intentions of their prin-(z) Burnet's cipals, and therefore, on the delivery of the arrears Memoirs of for the payment of the army, the Scottish army withdrew, and left the King in the hands of the English,

Folio 1677. ' who presently fend him to Holmby (z).' All things now feemed favourable to the parliament of England. Every foe was subdued at home, and the King himself a captive. Now, therefore, was the time for easing the kingdom from the heavy oppressions, which, for more than four years, it had groaned under, as well as to establish peace on lasting foundations. As the army had been raised and maintained at a vast expence, nothing was more natural or reasonable than to think, as foon as might be, of reducing it. Accordingly, February 19, 1646, O. S. the question being put in the house of commons, 'whether there should be a ' number of foot kept up at the pay of the kingdom, more than what will be fufficient for the keeping of ' fuch garrifons as shall be continued;' it passed in the (a) Journal, negative by a majority of ten (a). On the 23d of the fame month, the house proceeded to the consideration of the business concerning the garrisons, and on that, and many days afterwards, ordered that no garrison should be kept in some places; that the works of others should be slighted, and some of the most important continued, viz. Plymouth, Exeter-caftle, Poole, Weymouth, Portland, Hull, Scarborough-caftle, Liverpoole, Newcastle, and some others, deemed, as I suppose, at that time, of importance.

On the 25th of March following, some officers of the army petitioned the house of lords, and, besides requefting the payment of their arrears, and an act of indemnity, which they undoubtedly had a right to, they defired an 'opportune and timely answer' to their required and brought to an height unknown

to

quests, 'that the public worship of God may be speedily settled according to the word of God and the examples of the best reformed churches. That the subject may have the benefit of Magna Charta, and the petition of right, 6 fo far forth as may comport with the necessities of the kingdom. That all committees in the several counties may be removed; and that the treasurers and sequestrators of the said counties may be called to a fpeedy and strict account, for the better satisfaction ' and ease of the kingdom:' Together with many other things relative to themselves as officers, declaring, at the same time, that some of them had already engaged themselves for Ireland, and that the rest were ready to contribute their best assistance thereunto. Whereupon the officers, who subscribed the petition, were called in, and had for answer, 'That the house gave them thanks for their good affections to them, and their fervices to the kingdom and parliament; and that they take it well concerning their offer for Ire-' land: and, as to their arrears, their lordships will do their parts, and will take their petition into confideration.' The fame day a copy of this petition was presented to the house of commons by the same officers, to whom the house sent out four of their members with the following answer: 'That, as to their arrears, the house had and would take them into consideration, with others, in fuch manner as they should think fit, as well as their desires of employment. That, as to the rest of the petition, about the management of pub-· lic affairs, it did not concern any persons to give inftructions to the houses therein; yet, in considera-' tion the petitioners were men that had done fervice to the parliament, and, in regard of their professions, and that they might have done this merely out of in- (b) Parliaadvertency, they were willing to pass it by (b). I mentary History, vol. have given this answer on the authority of the Parlia-xv, p. 340, mentary History, not being able to find it in the Jour-

nale

to the English nation.—Not content with the nals of the house of commons. However, certain it is, that house was greatly alarmed at some petitions which were then fet on foot among the officers of the army: for, on the 27th of March 1647, it was refolved, that a letter be written to Sir Thimas Fairfax, general, to acquaint him, that this house hath been informed, that a petition is carrying on in the army: that he would take some course, by the best means he can, to make a ftop of it; and that a copy of the petition, delivered (c) Journal into this house this day, be sent to the general (c). And, on the 29th of the same month, a letter, directed to colonel Ressiter, of 28° Martii, at noon, figned H. with a paper inclosed, stilled, 'the heads of a petition,' endeavoured to be obtruded, as the fense of the army, delivered in to colonel Rossiter, was this day read. Refolved, &c. That thanks be given to colonel Rossiter and colonel Harley, for these timely informations. was, moreover, refolved, That the general should be defired to give order, that feveral officers [supposed to be concerned in the framing and figning the petition] do attend the house, and that the committee appointed for this affair should have power to examine commisfary-general Ireton. And a declaration appointed, prepared and brought in, with regard to the army, was now reported by Mr. Helles, who had always appeared with great zeal against the army party in the house. This declaration does not appear in the Journals, it being expunged June 3, 1647, at the desire or demand of the army.—The petition, referred to in these votes, contained a request for indemnity before disbanding; that satisfaction also be given them for their arrears; that they might not be compelled, by press or otherwise, to ferve out of the kingdom; that they might have fatisfaction for the losses they had sustained by adhering to the parliament, and a prefent supply of money. These were bold demands, and sufficient to rouse the attention and refentment of parliament, who ordered

the concessions made them by both houses, they

the following declaration (the same which was inserted, but is now expunged in the Journals) to be printed and published, and a number of copies thereof fent down in a letter to Sir Thomas Fairfax. 'The two houses of ' parliament having received information of a dangerous petition, with a representation annexed, tending to put the army into a distemper and mutiny, to put conditions upon the parliament, and obstruct the re-6 lief of Ireland, which hath been contrived and pro-6 moted by some persons in the army; they do declare their high dislike of that petition, their approbation and esteem of their good service who first discovered it, and of such officers and foldiers as have refused to ' join in it; and that, for such as have been abused, and, by the perfualions of others, drawn to subscribe it, if they shall, for the future, manifest their diflike of what they have done, by forbearing to proe ceed any further therein, it shall not be looked on as any cause to take away the remembrance and sense the houses have of the good services they have former-Iv done, but they shall be still retained in their good opinion, and shall be cared for with the rest of the e army, in all things necessary and fitting for the satiffaction of persons that have done so good and faithful fervice, and as may be expected from a parliament 6 fo careful to perform all things appertaining to hoonour and justice: and, on the other side, it is declared. That all those who shall continue in their diftempered condition, and go on in advancing and opromoting that petition, shall be looked upon, and (d) Parlia-

* turbers of the public peace (d).' Sir Thomas Fair fax returned an answer to the letter and declaration, full of duty and respect : but the soldiers undertook to vindicate their conduct, notwithstanding the lords had voted for the disbanding of such as would not engage themselves in the service of Ireproceeded against, as enemies to the state, and dif-mentary Hiftory, vol, xv. p. 344 land.

they had the insolence to take the King out of land. This was done in a very bold piece, intitled, A vindication of the officers of the army under Sir-· Thomas Fairfax;' in which, after infilling, that they had not faid or done any thing unreasonable, they tell the commons, '-that the sense of such expressions [aswere contained in the foregoing declaration] was fo-' irksome to them, who had ventured whatever theyefteemed dear to them in this world, for the prefervation of the freedom and privilege of that house, that they could not but earnestly implore their justicein the vindication of them.' This petition was figned by a very great number of officers. After the reading this in the house, April 30, 1647, major-general Skippon produced a letter, presented to him the day before by some troopers of several regiments in the army, in behalf of eight regiments of horse; in which, after many high and infolent expressions, they declared, 'that they would neither be employed for the service of Ire-· land, nor fuffer themselves to be disbanded, till their defires were granted, and the rights and liberties of the subject should be vindicated and maintained (e) *. In short, the disputes were carried on with great warmth between the parliament and the army. But the difputants were but ill matched. Votes were overpowered by arms; eloquence was dumb under the power of the fword. Though the parliament ordered part of the army to disband, and others to go for Ireland; though they promifed, flattered and threatened fuch as were indisposed to obey; it was all in vain. The army was as one body, and no impression was to be made on it. Therefere, finding contesting with it was to no purpose, especially after the seizing the King, by Joyce, at Holdenby, the house of commons, on the 15th of June,

(e) Parliamentary History, vol. xv. p. 359.

^{*} A, letter of almost the very same words, directed to lieutenant-general Cromwell, was by him delivered to Mr. Speaker. It was informed, the like was delivered to the General. Journal, April 30, 1647.

of the hands of the parliament's commisfioners

resolved. That the officers of this army, not in commission, shall have their full pay, upon their disbanding or engaging for Ireland, deducting for free quarters according to the course and rule of the army: that 10000 l. be allowed to the reduced officers : that the common foldiers should have their full pay, on the footing of the officers: that commission-officers should have a month's additional pay on their disbanding: that the declaration of both houses, on the 30th of March last, be expunged. This last vote was a bitter pill *, and net (as might be expected, where there was a fense of honour, or any tolerable share of spirit remaining) with confiderable opposition, both in the house of lords and commons. In both it was debated, but carried in the affirmative by a majority. 'Here, fays Whitlock, the e parliament began to furrender themselves and their opower into the hands of their own army (f).' Such (f) P. 250. were the beginnings of the quarrel between the civil and military powers. Cronwell's name does not appear in any of these proceedings hitherto. But the writers, who lived in those times, agree, that he was looked on to be at the bottom of them. Others were not wanting, fays Ludlow, who refolved the fecuring lieuteant-general Gromwell, suspecting that he had, under-

M 2

^{*} This will appear from the ordinance for the repeal of the declaration, which runs thus in the Journal: - Whereas the lurds and commons did, by a declaration of the 30th of March laft, declare their fense upon a petition, with the representation thereunto annexed; and whereas they have been fince informed, that the petitioners intended onot thereby to give any offence to the parliament, or any way to reflect upon, or leffen their authority : and calling to mind the great and eminent fervice done by the army to the parliament and kingdom : the lords and commons, being tender of the honour of the faid army, "have thought fit to ordain and declare, and be it declared and ordained, by the faid lords and commons, in the parliament of England affembled, and by the authority of the fame, that the faid former declaration, of the 30th of March, be rafed and expunged out of the Records and books of the faid houses; and wholly taken away, and made void: and that no member of the faid army shall receive any damage, prejudice of " reproach, for any thing in the faid former declaration." hand,

P. 190.

quotation

fioners at Holdenby, to whom he had been de-

hand, given countenance to this defign; but, he be-' ing advertised of it, went that afternoon towards the army, fo that they missed of him, and were not wil-(g) Vol. i. ' ling to fhew their teeth fince they could do no ' more (g).' Holles charges him with the fame fault, and speaks likewise of his going down to the army, on (b) See the his being suspected by the house, and joining in the subscription of a rebellious letter (b). Lord Clarendon, from Holles in note (v). speaking of these matters, says, "Cromwell hitherto car-' ried himself with that rare diffimulation (in which, ' fure, he was a very great master) that he seemed exe ceedingly incenfed against this insolence of the sol-' diers; was still in the house of commons when any fuch addresses was made; and inveighed bitterly a-' gainst the presumption, and had been the cause of the ' commitment, of some of the officers. He proposed - that the general might be fent down to the army, who, he faid, would conjure down this mutinous ' spirit quickly; and he was so easily believed, that he himself was sent once * or twice to compose the army; when, after he had staid two or three days, he "would again return to the house, and complain hea-'vily of the great licence that was got into the army: that, for his own part, by the artifice of his ene-' mies, and of those who defired that the nation should be again imbrewed in blood, he was rendered fo odious unto them, that they had a purpose to kill him, if, upon fome discovery made to him, he had not escaped out of their hands. And in these and the · like discourses, when he spake of the nation's being delivered by the Scots, in opposition to the

^{*} In the Journal of the 30th of April 1647, we find it refolved, &c. That field-marshal Skippen, licutenant-general Cromwell, commisfary Ireton, and colonel Fleetwood, be injoined forthwith to go down to their charges in the army, and employ their endeavours to quiet all diftempers in the army.—The house, prebably, were led into favoura-ble opinions of these officers from Skippon's and Cromwell's delivering that day the letters they had received from the troopers.

to be involved in new troubles, he would weep bitterly, and appear the most afflicted man in the world with the sense of the calamities which were like to ensue. But, as many of the wifer fort had long difcovered his wicked intentions, fo his hypocrify could ono longer be concealed. The most active officers and agitators were known to be his own creatures, and fuch who neither did, nor would, do any thing but by his direction. So that it was privately refolved, by the principal persons of the house of commons, that, when he came the next day into the house, which he feldom omitted to do, they would fend him to the Tower; prefuming, that, if they had once fee vered his person from the army, they should easily reduce it to its former temper and obedience: for they had not the least jealousy of the general Fairfax, whom they knew to be a perfect Presbyterian in judgment, and that Cromwell had the ascendant over him, purely by his diffimulation and pretence of confcience and fincerity. There is no doubt, Fairfax did onot then, nor long after, believe that the other had ' those wicked designs in his heart against the King, or the least imagination of disobeying the parliament. 'This purpose, of seizing upon the person of Cromwell, could not be carried fo fecretly, but that he had no-' tice of it; and the very next morning, after he had ' fo much lamented his desperate misfortune, in having ' loft all reputation, and credit, and authority, in the ' army, and that his life would be in danger if he were ' with it; when the house expected every minute his ' presence, they were informed, that he was met out of town, by break of day, with one fervant only, on the way to the army; where he had appointed a rendezvous of some regiments of the horse, and from whence he writ a letter to the house of commons, 'That having the night before received a letter from fome officers of his own regiment, that the jealoufy M 3

the troops had conceived of him, and of his want of kindness towards them, was much abated, so that they believed, if he would be quickly prefent with them, they would all in a fhort time, by his advice, be reclaimed: upon this he had made all the haste he could, and did find that the soldiers had been abused by misinformation; and that he hoped to discover the fountain from whence it sprung; and, " in the mean time, defired that the general, and the other officers in the house, and such as remained about the town, might be presently sent to their quarters; and that he believed it would be very neceffary, in order to the suppression of the late disteme pers, and for the prevention of the like for the time to come, that there might be a general rendezvous of the army; of which the general would best consider when he came down, which he wished might be hastened. It was now to no purpose to discover what "they had formerly intended, or that they had any ' jealoufy of a person who was out of their reach;
' and so they expected a better conjuncture; and, in and fo they expected a better conjuncture; and, in a few days after, the general, and the other officers, left the town, and went to their quarters (i). These concurrent testimonies will, I presume clearly evince that Cromuell was deemed the chief raiser and manager of the storm which carried all things before it, and levelled whatever came in its way. Fairfax, the general, declares strongly his difinclination to, and his abhorrence of, these proceedings. He attributes them to the agitators: but, I believe, he deemed Cromwell the chief of them, and had him and Ireton in his eye in the following passage: 'This mercy [the success of the army in the years 1645 and 1646] was foon clouded with abominable hypocrify and deceit, even in those men who had been instrumental in bringing this war to a conclusion. Here was the vertical point on which the army's honour and reputation turned into a reproach and scandal. Here the power of the army 'I once had was usurped by the agitators, the forerunners of confusion and anarchy (k).' None but

thele

(i) Vol. v. p. 46.

(k) Short Memorials,

P. 103.

authority of parliament (cc), and the fentiments of Fairfax. This opened a new scene

these men were able to usurp Fairfax's power of the army.

(cc) They took the King out of the hands of the commissioners of the parliament, &c.] Cromwell seems to have been determined at all events to secure and enlarge his power and authority. The tumults and commotions raifed by his means were intended as trials of his capacity and influence over the army. The success he had in these emboldened him, and caused him to aspire to something beyond what he yet was. Fully fensible that the parliament, though through fear it had truckled to him, yet hated him heartily, and longed only to crush him, as they would have done on the conclusion of a peace with the King: fully fensible, I fay, of this, he determined to prevent them, and to give the law both to Charles and the parliament. For this end he fecretly urged on the agitators to feize his Majesty's person, and thereby put it out of the power of the houses to conclude any thing with him, without the army's confent and approbation.—The following authorities will explain and enlarge what is here faid. One thing was yet wanting (as they fthe managers of the army] thought) for the carrying on their defign, and amufing the poor people of England with an expectation of their fettling a peace, fo to make them fit still and look on, whilst they trampled upon ' parliament, city and kingdom; which was to be · possest of the King's person, and make the world-· believe they would bring him up to his parliament, and fet him on his throne. For this, it feems, a " meeting was appointed at lieutenant-general Crom-" well's, upon the thirtieth of May, where it is resolved,

That cornet Joyce should, with a party of horse, go (1) See Hunto Holmby and seize upon his Majesty; which is pre-tington's fently executed, and given out that others had the account of like design, which they had prevented (1). At first this in note M 4 scene—His Majesty was treated very great respect by the army; every thing was

it must feem only the act of Mr. Joyce; Cromwell protested he knew nothing of it (though he was the man that appointed it to be done, as appears by what has been recited, taken out of some of their own authors); Sir Thomas Fairfax writes a letter to the house, professes the same for himself as in the pre-· fence of God, with a large undertaking for the rest of ' his officers, and the body of the army: and, perhaps, he faid true; I would fain be fo charitable as to beblieve it; nor, indeed, do I think the good man is privy to all their plots; he must have no more than what they are pleased to carve and chew for him, but · must swallow all, and own them when they come abroad. Here then they have the King, Joyce drives away the guards, forced colonel Greaves to fly, whom else they threatened to kill (murther being no fin in 'the visible faints); carries away his Majesty, and the commissioners that attend him, prisoners, and imme-(m) Holles's diately fends up a letter to certify what he had done, Memoirs, p. 6 with directions it should be delivered to Cromuel (m). Ludiew, who understood the designs and actions of the army, probably, better than Holles, speaking of the divisions between it and the parliament, adds, 'The agistators of the army, fensible of their condition, and sknowing that they must fall under the mercy of the e parliament, unless they could secure themselves from their power, by profecuting what they had begun; and fearing those who had shewed themselves so forward to close with the King, out of principle, upon any terms, would now, for their own preservation, e receive him without any, or rather put themselves un-6 der his protection; that they might the better subdue ' the army, and reduce them to obedience by force; · fent a party of horse under the command of cornet ' Josee, on the 4th of June, 1647, with an order in writing, to take the King out of the hands of the 96.

was rendered as agreeable as possible to him, in his captive situation, and Cromwell entered commissioners of parliament. The cornet, having placed guards about Holmby house, sent to acquaint the King with the occasion of his coming, and was admitted into his bedchamber, where, upon promise that the King should be used civilly, and have his ser-' vants and other conveniencies continued to him, he obtained his consent to go with him. But whilst cor-· net Youce was giving orders concerning the King's re-' moval, the parliament's commissioners took that occa-6 fion to discourse with the King, and persuaded him to alter his resolution; which force perceiving at his return, put the King in mind of his promise, acquainting him, that he was obliged to execute his orders; whereupon the King told him, that, fince he had passed his word, he would go with him; and, to ' that end, descended the stairs to take horse, the ' commissioners, of the parliament being with him. · Colonel Brown and Mr. Crew, who were two of s them, publickly declared, that the King was forced out of their hands; and fo returned, with an account of what had been done, to the parliament (n).' This p. 191. was a very bold stroke indeed! performed in the name of foldiers only under the command of Fairfax, but no doubt contrived by Cromwell and Ireton, in order 10 make themselves arbiters between King and parliament, and advance their own ambitious projects. Lord Clarendon affures us, that ' the King did, in truth, believe that their purpose was to carry him to some ' place where they might more conveniently murder him (o).' The author of the Icon Basilike more sensi- (o) Vol. v. bly observes, in his Majesty's person, 'This surprize of P. 48. ' me tells the world, that a King cannot be fo low but he is confiderable, adding weight to that party where (e) King he appears (p).' The King had no reason to fear Charles's murther: Joyce behaved with civility to him; promised Works, p. him all conveniencies; did what in him lay to please Lond. 1687. him, entered into a negociation with him, in order to his restoration; but terms being

him, and rendered him more pleased with his situation than he had before been. Let us hear Fairfax. 'So foon as I heard of it [the King's seizure at Holmby] ! I immediately fent away two regiments of horse, commanded by colonel Whalley, to remove this force, s and to fet all things again in their due order. But before he came to Holmby, the King was advanced two or three miles on his way to Cambridge, attended by Force, where colonel Whalley acquainted the King, he was fent by the general to let him know how much he was troubled at those great insolencies that had been committed so near his person; and, as he had not the e least knowledge of them before they were done, so he had omitted no time in feeking to remove that force, which he had orders from me to fee done; and therefore he defired his Majesty that he would be e pleased to return again to Holmby, where all things ' should be settled again in as much order and quiete ness as they were before. And also he desired the commissioners to reassume their charge, as the parliament had directed them, which he was also to defire them to do from the general. But the King refused to return, and the commissioners to act; whereupon colonel Whalley urged them to it, faying, he had an express command to fee all things well settled about his Majesty, which could not be done, but by his returning again to Helmby. The King faid positively, he would not do it: fo the colonel pressed him no more to it, having, indeed, a special direction from ' me to use all tenderness and respect, as was due to his Majesty. The King came that night, or the next, to Sir John Cutts's house near Cambridge; and the e next day I waited on his Majesty, it being also my bufiness to persuade his return to Holmby, but he was 6 otherwise resolved. I prest the commissioners also to act according to the power given them by the parlianot agreed on, or dangers of some kind or other (DD) being apprehended, Cromwell broke ment, which they also refused to do: so having spent the whole day about this business, I returned to my quar-' ters; and, as I took leave of the King, he faid to e me, Sir, I have as good interest in the army as you; by which I plainly faw the broken reed he leaned on. 'The agitators could change into that colour which ferved next to their ends, and had brought the King into an opinion that the army was for him. That it ' might appear what a real trouble this act was to me, ' though the army was almost wholly infected with this humour of agitation, I called for a council of war to proceed against Jose for this high offence ' and breach of the articles of war; but the officers, whether for fear of the distempered soldiers, or rather (as I suspessed) a secret allowance of what was (9) Short done, made all my endeavours in this ineffectual (q). Memorials, I have transcribed Fairfax's account at length, that the P. 113reader may the better be enabled to judge of the justice of Clarendon's narrative above mentioned, and also of the truth of the message, delivered to the house of lords by the Earl of Dumfermline, from the King, 'that (r) Parliamentary his Majesty went from Holderly unwillingly (r).'— History, Thus, fays Perinchief, was that religious Prince made vol. xv. once more the mock of fortune, and the sport of the P. 399. factious, and was drawn from his peaceful contemplations and prospect of heaven, to behold and con- (1) Life of verse with men set on fire of hell (1). Whether prefixed to the reader be disposed to laugh or be serious at this his works, folemn paragraph is very indifferent to me; but the P. 40. writer, who composed it, stands little chance for credit with fuch as with attention have studied the character

(DD) Terms being not agreed on, or danger leing apprehended, Cromwell broke off all thoughts of friendship with Charles, &c.] The King no sooner sound himself in the hands of the army, than he had reason to be sa-

broke off all thoughts of friendship with the King, and openly declared for bringing him

w

tisfied with their civility and respect. Ludlow, with fome indignation, speaks of the attendance and homage that was paid him by some chief officers. Lord Clarendon has given us a particular account of the treatment he received, which I will here transcribe for the fatiffaction of the reader. - The King found himself at Newmarket, attended by greater troops and fuperior · officers; fo that he was presently freed from any sub-· jection to Mr. Joyce, which was no small satisfaction to him; and they who were about him appeared men of better breeding than the former, and paid his Ma-· jesty all the respect imaginable, and seemed to defire to please him in all things. All restraint was taken off from persons resorting to him, and he saw every day the faces of many who were grateful to him; and he no fooner defired that fome of his chaplains 6 might have leave to attend upon him for his devotion, but it was yielded to, and they who were named by ' him (who were Dr. Sheldon, Dr. Morley, Dr. Sanderfon, and Dr. Hammond) were prefently fent, and gave. their attendance, and performed their functions at the ordinary hours, in their accustomed formalities; all persons, who had a mind to it, being suffered to be present, to his Majesty's infinite satisfaction, who began to believe that the army was not fo much his enemy as it was reported to be; and the army had fent an address to him full of protestation of duty, and befought him, that 'he would be content, for fome time, to relide among them, until the affairs of the kingdom were put into fuch a posture as he might find all things to his own content and fecurity, which they infinitely defired to see as soon as might be; and, to that purpose, made daily instances to the parlia-" ment.' In the mean time his Majesty sate still, or e removed to fuch places as were most convenient for the march of the army; being in all places as well · proto justice. In order to which, as well as to accomplish his schemes of power and provided for and accommodated, as he had used to be in any progress: the best gentlemen, of the seve-' ral counties through which he passed, daily resorted to him, without distinction: he was attended by some of his old trufty fervants in the places nearest his perfon: and that, which gave him most encouragement to believe that they meant well, was, that in the ' army's address to the parliament, they defired that care might be taken for fettling the King's rights, according to the feveral professions they had made in ' their declarations; and that the royal party might be treated with more candour and less rigour: and many ' good officers, who had ferved his Majesty faithfully, were civilly received by the officers of the army, and ' lived quietly in their quarters, which they could not do any where else; which raised a great reputation to the army throughout the kingdom, and as much reproach upon the parliament (t). What the confe- (t) Vol. v. quence of all this was, I have elsewhere, at large, shewn (u). Suffice it here to say, that Charles might (u) Historihave had reasonable good terms, his condition constitution and constitution constit dered, from Cromwell and Ireton; but, on refuling to count of the close with them frankly, he lost the opportunity he Life of Charles I. then had, and rendered them his most avowed ene-p. 388. mies. The fincerity of Cromwell, in his negotiations with the King at this juncture, is called in question, by a very late writer, in the following words: ' Had these been fincerely his fentiments [affection and regard for the King] he would never have altered them, for the King gave him no occasion; since it is clearly ' proved, that his final answer to the proposals which were made him, not only spoke the sense of him and " Ireton, as the King conceived it, but was altered by their hands till it satisfied themselves. Had he been e really inclined to restore the King, he might have 6 done it now with a high hand; a great majority of nica, p.

1552.

ambition, he promoted the votes of no more ad-

the parliament were for him; the city of London was in their fentiments; the measures taken by the Scots, and the infurrections in feveral counties in his favour, fhew, that this was also the fense of the nation: if, therefore, lieutenant-general Cromwell had made use 6 of his wonderful capacity, to dispose the army not to any new design, but to have performed their own formises; he might have settled the government upon (x) Biogra- its old foundation, and have made himself a very great man (x). i. e. he might have been made Earl of E/lex, and knight of the garter, things faid to be promised him by the King, as well as the advancement (y) Flagel- of his fon, and his fon-in-law Ireton, to posts of high lum, p. 55 honour and dignity (y). I will not warrant what is here faid concerning the honours promifed to Cromwell and his family: the writer, from whom I quote it, is of too little authority to have any great stress laid on his unsupported narrative; nor will I make any remarks on the reasonings just recited, any farther than to obferve, that Cromwell had probably sufficient cause to alter his fentiments, with respect to the expediency of concluding a peace with Charles, and reinstating him in his power. Sufficient cause he had, I say, for this: for his treaty with the King was very ill refented by the agitators, after Charles had fo long dallied with the army, and neglected to comply with the terms proposed for his fafety and restoration. Cremwell had got the better of these men, indeed, at the rendezvous at Ware, by the death of one, and making prisoners of others. But their spirit was unconquerable. 'Two thirds of the army had been fince with I etcn and Cromwell, to tell them, that, though they were certain to perish in the enterprize, they would leave nothing unattempted to bring the whole army to their fense; and that, if e all failed, they would make a division in the army, and join with any who would affift them in the defruction of those that should oppose them.'-Upon this

boid

addresses to his Majesty; defeated the Welch and bold declaration 'tis faid Cromwell and Ireton argued thus: If the army divide, the greater part will join with the presbyters, and will, in all likelihood, prevail, to our ruin, by forcing us to make our applications to ' the King, wherein we shall rather beg than offer any ' affistance, which, if the King should give, and afterwards have the good fortune to prevail, if he should then pardon us, it will be all we can pretend, and ' more than we can certainly promise ourselves: there-' upon concluding, that, if they could not bring the army to their fense, that it was best to comply with (z) Ludlow, them, a schism being utterly destructive to both (z). vol. i. p. Lord Helles, speaking of Cromwell's treaty with the 228. King, owns the danger he was at length in from the army on that account: 'The party' [of the agitators] would not give way to this [the agreement with his ' Majesty]; hatred to the King, envy and jealousies ' against their aspiring leaders, and a violent defire of having their work done at once, lay all perfons and things level on the fudden, bring forth their mon-· strous conceptions at one birth, made them break out, fly in their faces, discover many of their villanies, and, as appears by that business of Lilburn and Wild-" man, even resolve to take Cromwell out of the way, man, even resolve to take Cromweu out or the way, (a) Meand murder him for an apostate (a). Surely this does moirs, p. not look as if Cromwell might have restored the King 184. with an high hand! The truth is, he might have done it in the beginning of the King's residing with the army; but his stiffness, his obstinacy, if I may so speak; in adhering to his own opinions, and the hopes he had of availing himfelf of the disputes between the parliament and the army, rendered the latter very suspicious of his intentions, and, at length, averse to his interest. Besides, if I might offer a conjecture in this affair, it looks to me exceeding probable, that Cromvell, after a thorough trial, might be afraid to trust to what his Majesty promised, in order to remount the throne. For,

and the Scotch, who took up arms in behalf

according to Clarendon, Oliver declared in the house of commons, 'that the King was a man of great parts, and great understanding, but that he was so great a dissembler, and so false a man, that he was not to be ' trufted. And thereupon repeated many particulars, whilst he was in the army; that his Majesty wished that fuch and fuch things might be done, which, being done to gratify him, he was displeased and com-plained of it: that, whilst he professed, with all so-· lemnity, that he referred himself wholly to the parlia-6 ment, and depended only upon their wildom and coun-· fels, for the fettlement and composing the distractions of the kingdom, he had, at the fame time, fecret treaties with the Scottish commissioners, how he might embroil the nation in a new war, and destroy the ' parliament (b).' Such was the light in which Charles probably appeared to Cromuell, who pierced through every mask, while his own was generally impenetrable to those who were most conversant with him. There is an anecdote related concerning the infincerity of the King to the lieutenant-general, which, if true, will eafily account for every thing done to the former by the latter. In a letter to his Queen, without whose knowledge and confent he feldom cared to do any thing, he is faid to have acquainted her, 'That, though he affented to the army's propofals, yet, if by to doing, he could procure peace, it would be easier then to take off Cromwell, than now he was the head that governed the army.' This is faid to have come to his knowledge, and determined him never more to trust the King (c). For the truth of this I will not vouch, though it is agreeable to the whole of his Majesty's p. 69. 8vc. character. After this, can we wonder that Cromwell Lond. 1724. might think himself at liberty to practise Charles's arts on himself? or rather, are we not to admire at those who reflect on Cromwell for endeavouring to induce the King to remove by stealth from Hampton-court (where his

(b) Vol. v. p. 91.

(c) Life of

Cromwell,

half of the King, and purged the house of com-

his life he was informed was in danger) and go into the Isle of Wight, as into a safe prison (if that in fact was his intention) where he might be ready at hand to be disposed of as best suited the inclinations or conveniency of the ruling party of the army? ----- What man almost would not have done the fame? However, as to the letter written by Cromwell to colonel Whalley, on which (d) Mefo much stress is laid by Lord Holles (d), and the writ moirs, p. ers of the Biographia Britannica, if we may believe 187. Charles himself, it was not the occasion of his slight from Hampton-court. In a letter written by him from thence, dated November 11, 1647, and left for colonel Whalley, he writes as follows: I have been fo civilly " used by you and major Huntington, that I cannot but by this parting farewell acknowledge it under my ' hand, as also to defire the continuance of your cour-' tefie, by your protecting of my household stuff and " moveables of all forts, which I leave behind me in this house, that they be neither spoiled nor imbezeled. ' -- So being confident you wish my preservation and restitution, I rest your friend, Charles. I assure you ' it was not the letter you showed me yesterday that made " me take this resolution, nor any advertisement of that kind: but, I confess, I am loath to be made a close (c) King prisoner, under pretence of securing my life (e). So Charles's that Lord Clarendon has only committed one of his usual Works, p. mistakes, when he fays, 'That his Majesty did really 156. believe their malice [the levellers] was at the height. ' and that they did defign his murder (f).'-That (f) Vol. v. Cromwell wrote to Whalley is certain, and Whalley declares, 'That the letter, intimating fome murtherous delign, or, at least, some fear of it, against his Ma-'s jesty, was the ground of his shewing it to him. When I received this letter,' adds he, 'I was much aftonished, 's abhorring that fuch a thing should be done, or so much as thought of, by any that bear the name of christians. When I had shewn the letter to his Majesty, I to'd commons, after it had voted his Majesty's con-

him, I was sent to safeguard, and not to murther him.

· I wisht him to be confident no such thing should be done. I would first die at his foot in his defence; and I therefore shewed it him, that he might be af-

(g) Pcck's Defiderata curiofa, lib. ix. p. 42.

'fured, though menacing speeches came frequently to his eare, our general officers abhorred fo bloody and villanous a fact (g). - Milton's vindication of Cromwell, against the charge of persuading the King to withdraw into the Isle of Wight, must not be here omitted. - Alterum est crimen persuasisse regi Cromuellum, ut in insulam Vectim clanculum se subduceret. Constat regem Garolum rem fuam multis aliàs rebus; ter fuga e perdidisse; primum cum Londino Eboracum fugit, deinde cum ad Scotos in Anglia conductitios, postremò cum 4 ad infulam Vectim. At hujus postremæ suasor erat Cromuellus. Optime; sed tamen ego regios illos pri-6 mum miror, qui Carolum toties affirmare non dubitant fuisse prudentissimum, & eundem simul vix unquam fuæ spontis; sive apud amicos sive inimicos, in aula vel in castris, in aliena ferè potestate semper fuisse; nunc uxoris, nunc episcoporum, nunc purpuratorum, nunc militum, denique hostium: pejora e plerumque confilia, & pejorum fermè seguutum; Ca-6 rolo perfuadetur, Carolo imponitur, Carolo illuditur e metus incutitur, spes vana ostenditur, velut præda om-' nium communis, tam amicorum quam hostium, agitur 6 & fertur Carolus. Aut hæc è scriptis suis tollant, aut ' sagacitatem Caroli prædicare desistant. Fateor deinde, quam vis prudentia atque consilio præstare pul-' crum sit tamen ubi respublica factionibus laborat, ' fuis incommodis haud carere; & consultissimum quemque eo magis obnoxium calumniis utriusque partis reddere: boc sæpe Cromuello obsuit: hinc Presbyte-' riani, inde hostes quicquid in se durius fieri putant ' non id communi senatus confilio, sed Cromuello soli ' imputant; immo si quid per imprudentiam ipsi malè egerunt, id dolis & fraudibus Cremuelli affignare non erubescunt; culpa omnis in eum derivatur, omnis in eum faba cuditur. Et tamen certissimum est sugam ad vectim regis Caroli absenti tum aliquot millibus pasfuum Cromuello, tam novum accidisse & inopinatum, quam cuilibet ex senatu tum in urbe versanti, quem' ut de re inopinatissima sibi recens allata per literas certiorem secit. Res autem ita se habuit; exercitus universi vocibus rex territus, qui eum nullis officiis fuis aut pollicitis factum meliorem, ad supplicium pose cere jam tunc cæperat, statuit cum duobus tantum-6 modo consciis nocturna suga sibi consulere : verum fugiendi certior, quam quo fugeret, per comitum suorum vel imperitiam vel timiditatem, inops confilii quo se reciperet, Hamundo Vectis insulæ præsidi se ultro dedidit; ea spe, facilem sibi ex ea insula, parato jam navigio, transitum in Galliam aut in Belgium fore. Hæc ego de fuga regis in Vectim ex iis comperi quibus rem totam pernoscendi quàm proxima facultas. erat (h). i. e. Another crime is, that Cromwell per-Works, fuaded the King to withdraw himself privately to the Vol. ii. p. Isle of Wight. Now its plain King Charles ruined his 336. own affair otherwise in many things, and no less than three times by flight: as, first, when he fled from London to York; afterwards, when he ran to the. hireling Scots in England; and, last of all to the Isle of Wight. But Cromwell was the persuader of this alast flight! Good indeed! But I first admire those royalifts, who never flick to affirm fo often, that "Charles was one of the most prudent persons living, and still, that the same man was hardly ever at his own disposal: that, whether with his enemies or his friends, in the court or in the camp, he was almost 'always' in the power of another; now of his wife, then of the bishops; now of the peers, then of the foldiery; and last of his enemies: that, for the most part, he followed the worfer counfels; and, almost always, of the worser men. Charles is persuaded; · Charles is imposed on; Charles is deceived; fear is impressed on him; vain hope is set before him; Charles is carried and hurried about, as if he was the com-6 mon prey of all, both friends and enemies. But let ' them either blot these things out of their write ings, or elfe give over trumpeting up the fagacity of ' Charles. Next, I confess, though it be honourable to excel in prudence and counsel, yet that, where a commonwealth labours under factions, this 6 doth not always want its inconveniencies; but renders any, even the most prudent, so much the more obnoxious to the calumnies of each party. This often was the case of Cromwell. On the one side, the Presbyterians; on the other, the enemy [Royalists] whatever hardships they are loaded with, impute it e all, not to the common advice of parliament, but of Cromwell only. Nay, if themselves imprudently ' act any thing amis, do not blush to lay it wholly to the deceits and frauds of Cromwell! All the fault is 6 thrown upon him; all the black is fluck upon his coat. And yet it is most certain, that the flight of King Charles to the Isle of Wight fell out as new and unexpectedly to Cromwell (who was then fome miles off) as it was furprifing to any of the parliament, at that time residing in London, whom he made acquainted with it by letter, as of a most unlooked-for accident, the news whereof was just then brought him. Now the matter happened thus: the King (affrighted by the menaces of the whole army, who, finding him onothing amended, either by their good offices or pro-· mifes for him, had now begun to require he should be brought to punishment) determined, with only two attendants, to provide for his own safety by a noctur-· nal flight; but furer of flying, than whither he should 4 fly, either by the unskilfulness or timidity of his companions; and, not knowing where to betake himfelf, he, at last, voluntarily threw himself into the hands of Hammond, governor of the Isle of Wight; with this hope, that he might find an easy passage out of ' that island, a small vessel being provided privately for the purpose, either into France or Holland. And these matters, touching the King's flight into the Isle of " Wight, I learnt of them, who had as great advantage as may be for knowing the truth.' - This feems very strong in Cromwell's behalf. -- But, had he wrote the letter concessions a sufficient ground (EE) to proceed letter to Whalley, with the defign suggested, of which there is no proof, where would have been the harm of it, as I before said, or who would not have thought himself at liberty to have acted a like part with a man of such a character and such views? The statesman, perhaps, would not easily be found; or, if such an one there were, his understanding would not be greatly admired by men of the fame profession.

(EE) He defeated the Welch and Scots, and purged the house of commons, &c.] Charles having thrown himself into the hands of Hammond, governor of the Isle of Wight, was treated by him with great civility and respect. And the parliament, who had been much alarmed at his Majesty's escape, being informed of the place of his abode, determined to fend commissioners to the lile of Wight, in order to treat with him concerning peace, so necessary to himself and the kingdom. But, on the King's refusal to agree to the preliminary propositions, they immediately determined to make no more addresses to him, but to proceed to the settlement of the nation without him. Their reasons they submitted to the public, in a declaration which was printed and dispersed in every corner. This declaration, and the votes on which it was founded, very justly alarmed the fears of Charles and his friends. They wrote, they petitioned, they were tumultuous at the door of the house of commons, and, at length, had recourse to arms in his favour. But none of these things, for the present, succeeded. The insurrection under the lords Giring and Capel, on the furrender of Colchester to Fairfax, came to nothing; that in Wales, under colonel Poyer, Cromwell, with no very great difficulty, subdued; and, immediately, with very speedy marches, he came up with Duke Hamilton, who himself was taken prifoner, and the whole body of Scots'and English, under his command, routed. This, properly, put a period to the fecond civil war, in which the rashness and impru-N 3

ceed upon for the fettlement of the peace of

dence of the one fide was as remarkable, as the valour and good conduct of the other. 'All this great victory,' fays Clarendon, ' was got by Cromwell, with an army amounting to a third part of the Scots in number, if they had been all together; and it was not di-' minished half an hundred in obtaining this victory, ' after the English forces, under Langdale had been de-' feated (i).' This was the battle of Preston, fought August 17, 1648. The Scots army were 'twelve thousand foot, well armed, and five thousand horse. · Langdale had two thousand five hundred foot, and one thousand five hundred horse; in all twenty one ' thousand; and in the parliament's army, in all, about eight thousand fix hundred! and, of the enemy, about two thousand were flain, and about nine thousand prisoners taken, besides what were lurking in hedges ' and private places, which the country people daily ' brought in or destroyed (j).' For this victory a solemn thankfgiving was ordered throughout the kingdom, on the seventh of September following (*). After of the house this Gramwell marched forward for Scotland, in order effectually to suppress the Hamiltonian party. In his mons, Aug. march his discipline was very exact, and his order so good, that no ground of complaint was given to the inhabitants. At length he arrived at Edinburgh, 'where he was received with great ceremony, and demanded, that none, who had been in action in the late wicked engagement and invalion, might, henceforward, be employed in any public place of trust; to which the committee of estates there gave a satisfactory answer. ' He had also visits and conferences with commissioners from the kirk, and from the provost and magistrates of Edinburgh, and a strong guard of foldiers at his 1 ldging. At the time of his being at Edinburgh fee veral other demands were made by him to the com-' mittee of estates, who gave him very fair answer, ' and he reserved liberty for the parliament of England

(i) Vol. v. P. 165.

(i) Whitlock, p. 332.

of com-

OLIVER CROMWELL.

of the kingdom. This was usually called Pride's to make fuch farther demands as they should think requifite. The charges of Cromwell's entertainment, and of all his company, during the time of their being at Edinburgh, were defrayed by the lord provost of the city, by order of the committee of estates; and " Cromwell, Haselrigge, and the rest of their company, were entertained by general Leven, the lord Argyle, and many other lords, at a sumptuous banquet in the castle. At their going away, the castle saluted them, ' with many great guns, and vollies of small shot, and divers lords convoyed them out of the city (k). $\frac{1}{2}$ $\frac{(k)}{\log k}$, $\frac{1}{2}$ $\frac{(k)}{\log k}$, $\frac{1}{2}$ $\frac{1}{2}$ $\frac{(k)}{\log k}$, $\frac{1}{2}$ $\frac{1}{2}$ Whilst Oliver was in Scotland, the parliament, fearing the army, who had so frequently been troublesome to them, and likewise the adherents of the King, who had rifen fo lately in his favour, and willing, if possible, to procure peace to the kingdom, revoked the votes of no more addresses, opened a treaty with his Majesty in the Isle of Wight, and were about to have brought matters to a conclusion. But the foldiery, dreading the consequences of a peace with respect to themselves, feized the king at Newport, conducted him under guard to Hurst-castle, presented a remonstrance to the house of commons against any further treaty, and insisted on bringing him and his adherents to justice. The house was now alarmed—they voted that the feizure of the King was without their knowledge or consent, and that his concessions to the propositions upon the treaty were a fufficient ground to proceed upon for the fettlement of the kingdom. Whereupon the army marched up to London, seized and imprisoned a good number of the members, and hindered very many more from going into the house; whereby it came to pass, that every thing was carried according to their own determinations. This exclusion and force on the house was on the fixth of December, one thousand fix hundred and forty-eight. On the next day, at the request of an eminent man in the army, the following petition was printed. I give it as a curiofity to the reader, who may confider it as valuable, on account of the matter and the manner; however, as it has escaped the notice of other writers, it will have the merit of novelty here.

Pride's purge, from the officer employed to feize

- To the right honourable Thomas Lord FAIRFAX, our faithful general,
- . The humble petition of all the officers and foldiers of the regiment commanded by colonel Thomas. · Pride.

· Humbly sheweth,

WHEREAS it hath pleased the Lord of Hosts (who was called upon to decide the controverfy (who was called upon to decide the controverry of this nation) to write his name upon your fword in very legible characters, as appears upon record twice, viz. in the year -45, where we had 114 victories, and now this last summer above 30, even to our astonishment, who were used by you in that service, that those proud billows in Wales, England and Scotland, have been bounded and calmed, in less than fix months; and when through many tirefome marches and conflictings with many deaths (to fay no more, flest we be counted boasters) we thought when the onorth and the fouth wind had thus blown upon the s garden, that the spices would have flown out: behold we have our forrows repeated, and our fears increafed, making our wounds even to bleed afresh. For, . We find many good and just petitions from city, s country and army, not only unanswered, laid by, and ' flighted, but also things contrary to their honest defires practized; which appears first, by treating with a f conquered enemy, contrary to the vote of non-addreffes, against which this army is engaged by life and feize and secure the members. High com-

s death; yea, and to make the treaty the fruits of our " victories over the Scots, resolving to beg mercy of him, the very hour that army of his was begging mercy of sus. Secondly, not only treating, but falling from their refolved propositions, especially in that of delinquents, from 37 not to be spared to 7, and those neither confiderable, nor attainable, mocking the people in their covenant, which is to bring these to condign punishment, and as if that were not enough, to abate fo much in compositions of the rest, (as if such a ' compliance was intended) as we should change conditions with the enemy, and fight and conquer ourfelves into flavery. Thirdly, to add more load to the grieved petitioners, their best friends, and gratify the worst of enemies, 14 days more is granted, tendring a complyance upon any terms; yea, though by agreement, he hath taken upon him the blood of the three kingdoms: and to leave us hopeless of any good by him, he abets his fon in that pyracy, and Ormond in that res newed conspiracy against that little protestant blood unexhausted in Ireland. Nor can we but be thoughtful why fome notice might not have been given to your excellency and army, concerning a treaty, fince our trustees have so often acknowledged God to have fent them prefervation by this hand, but we only point at that. We take leave to tell your excellency what ' you hear of daily to your intollerable grief, the army " must be made again the burthensome stone to the peo-• ple (which is no new defign) by their non-payment, " and even then (if ever) it had sweat blood for their ' fafety, by whom thus unworthily neglected we must f profess not an ingenious soldier of the meanest rank. but doth blush to receive his unpayed for entertainment; and the rather, 1. Because unexpectedly ref turns to it. 2. Because the country pays their taxes. 4. Because bad men are enriched by it. 4. Because fhame and contempt will be the foldiers portion. 5.

plaints were made of this action, as infolent, unjust,

Because it still sows seed of new broils where people are thus abused. Sir, we have much to complain of, but of nothing more than that the main ends of these wars, crowned with mercy even to miracle, are not reaped, the fox stealing that from us by subtilty, which the lyon could not tear by cruelty: Wherefore in our own names, and the names of the betrayed, abused people of England, we humbly beseech your excellencies affishance of us, and concurrence with us, in these ensuing requests and groans of our souls, which may not long be denied us, left we faint or ftruggle as we can, for the life of good men and a good cause.

I. That justice may suddenly and equally be dispensed according to the desires of our honoured friends in London, Leicestershire, and others, manifested by their several petitions, and the parliament's declaration concerning the King's evils afferted; or bewailed and ree pented.

II. That your army be instantly reckoned withall, and paid, and so dealt with for the future (if they must be used) that every regiment may know their own county, and there receive their pay immediately, without any other treasurers or ways of trouble, that so the people themselves may see what they have for their money. In this we are impatient, or so passionately affected, that we gaspe for help. This regiment hath had but one month's pay since May, having marched 1300 miles this summer.

1300 miles this fummer.

111. That the people may know in print, with all fpeed, which way all public monies are disposed of in all counties and places, and that of all kinds; which may be done, if every collector and receiver of money be forthwith enjoined to print their receipts and disbutsements, for if the soldiers be not paid, the people ask what's become of the revenue, compositions, sequestrations, excise, lands, &c.

· IV.

unjust, tyrannical, and subversive of the freedom

· IV. That we may have a just and righteous government fettled in this nation, advancing godliness, we abhorring anarchy, confusion, and levelling men's ' estates, so often charged upon us: for which ends we defire these two things, in pursuance of which (by help from heaven) we resolve to venture our all. First, that the grand and capital enemies, may, without delay, be brought to justice, which is the main root of our ' mifery, we finding all other ways attempted altogether invalid to carry on this work of common fafety. Secondly, for the dispatch of justice upon all delinquents, for the rectifying all crooked things among us, and for the good of us and the generations to come, we humbly conceive our last and surest way will be ' for your excellency and the army, to make a speedy offer to the commons house in your name and the are mies, and in behalf of all England, that such of them as have been faithful to the kingdoms interest, declare ' with you and the nation; and that the contrary minded, false, royal, and neutral party may know, that our enemies must not be our rulers, we professing that good men, rather than good laws, must fave us, though we disjoin them not. And to this last work we humbly incite your excellency, the army, and all true Eng-6 li/b hearts; without which we shall not forbear any e means the Lord shall direct us to, whereby we may free ourselves, from the guilt of enslaving the kingdom, to one, or more; and if any shall object, we put violence upon authority, we hereby proclaim to the world, that neither your excellency nor ourselves have received commissions from the parliament as now constituted, the swaying part thereof, (as lately in Scotland) brought over to the King's defigns: but from that good party in it, who struggled through many hae zards, to model this army for the kingdoms fafety: Nor are we to attend forms and customs in this extremity; we can as willingly fet down as march, fufdom of the parliament. Others, on the

fer as act, would but the godly party in the kingdom. call us thereunto, and think themselves preserved by it. But the people call to us for these things, and we to your excellency, your known worth inviting us hereunto; in profecution of which, as an unparalleled instrument, we shall live or dye with your excellency, having folemnly promifed, in answer to the wonders God hath wrought amongst us, to attempt and attend these two last expedients through all hazards. cannot fo undervalue our God, and the rich experience we have had in behalf of this nation, as to fee them bie (like Islachar) under these sinful burdens, our colds, heats, nakedness, want, hunger, hardships, difficulties, dangers, cares, fears, out of which our bleffed and ever to be praised God, hath brought us, suggesting these things unto us, for that flock of slaughter in this kingdom. Sir, we can dye, but not endure to fee our mother England dye before us (1).'-From this address is easily to be collected the spirit of the army, the principles on which it acted, the authority it affumed, and the hazard of contesting with it. It appears to have looked on itself as an independant body, capable of advising, directing and giving the law to the senate and people of England. This was the effect of the felfdenying ordinance, which was foreseen by many, and now felt by all. What was alledged in defence of these proceedings of the army, will be found in the following note. I cannot but observe here to the reader, the spirit of the English royalists at this time. The Scots had raised an army in aid of the King, the parliament was garbelled for treating of a peace with him-was not this meritorious in the eye of a cavalier? Far from it-at this very time, both Scots and parliament were treated with the utmost virulence and contempt by those very persons, for whose master they had subjected themfelves to the greatest inconveniencies. Speaking of the army under Hamilton, and its defeat, a writer of this time

(1) Moderate Intelligencer, Dec. 7, 1648. contrary, have attempted to vindicate it, and apo-

time has the following expressions. 'It was never yet known that the blew bonnet would enter lifts upon the gilded promises of a public faith, or the huxters cold hopes of best be trust. And when all this is done; be confident, their hands will be more ready to receive it, than their hearts to earn it. It has ever been observed of the peasantry of that nation, that they could feed better than fight. Plundering was their only master piece: which they could finger with such dexterity, as if they had been nurfed and bred up in ' that trade from their infancy.'----And again-- 'What elfe could be expected by Calidon, being by chronoloe gifts rendered to be the emblem of disloyalty; a stran-(m) The ger to equity; an harbour for injury; the magazine loyal Sacriof iniquity; the counterfeit of amity (m). With fice presentrespect to the members of parliament excluded by the ed in the army, they were treated in the like scurrilous manner by Deaths of the same party in the following verses.

Sir Charles Lucas and Sir George Lifle, p. 27. 38. 12mo. 1648.

· Farewell ye race of Judas that betray'd

· The King your royal master; and have lay'd

Such burthens on our shoulders, God on high

Grant you a dire and bloody tragedie.

You were the champions of a wicked cause;

You have unthron'd your fovereigne; and the laws

By you are quite subverted: you have rent In pieces a most blessed government.

' Now let their just and woful cries and tears,

Whom you made widowes pierce th' Almighties ears;

And let those orphans, who by your expresse

· Have lost their fathers, and are fatherlesse;

Roare loud for deadly vengeance, and God grant

As they, your wives and children may know want.

We'll to your graves your herses laughing bring,

· Instead of dirges we will carolls fing:

'In joyful strains we'll pen your elegies,

And chronicle your stinking memories.

apologize for Cromwell, the author and abettor

Lord Clarendon's treatment of these gentlemen, as well as the Scottish nation, is not much more decent (0).

(n) Mercurius Pragmaticus, Dec. 19, 1648. (o) See vol. v. p. 114. and 240.

of Kings

i. p. 357.

Saying here lies, (and no man doth lament)

• The rotten members of a parliament (n).

-Milton therefore feems to have had reason for cautioning them 'To beware an old and perfect enemy, who though he hope by fowing discord to make them his instruments, yet cannot forbear a minute the open (p) Tenure threatning of his desperate revenge upon them, when they have served his purposes (p). A caution howand Magifand Magui-trates, in his ever reasonable, yet neglected by those concerned, till Works, vol. their old and perfect enemy had opportunity of fatiating the desperate revenge he had threatned. But to proceed, in all this affair of the exclusion of the members, Cromwell's name appears not. Nay Mr. Ludlow tells us, that lieutenant-general Cromwell the night after the interruption of the house arrived from Scot-6 land and lay at Whitehall, where, and at other places, he declared he had not been acquainted with this defign; yet fince it was done, he was glad of it, and ' would endeavour to maintain it (q).' Others fay, ' it was done by Cromwell's command (r).' However this be, we need not doubt but Ireton, and the other chief officers concerned, were fully satisfied they had Cromwell's approbation. They would not have taken such a step without it. For though Fairfax was easy and manageable, Cromwell was very different, nor would he have failed shewing his resentment against those who should have prefumed to have acted opposite to his will. His declarations on this head are not, I think, much to be regarded. Politicians have a language of their own. They abound with quirks, subtelties and distinctions; they explain away and interpret as they imagine will best fuit their circumstances and conveniences. To all this. if we add Cromwell's known diffimulation, we shall see little cause to rely much on them. I will close this note with

(9) Vol. i. p. 272. (r) See Flagellum, p.

66.

(s) Journal.

tor of it. Their reasons will be found below (FF). What followed is well known— Suffice with observing that the house of commons having notice of the seizing of their members, with great seeming earnestness applyed to the general for their release, and declared it to be their positive pleasure that they be forthwith discharged; but no answer satisfactory being returned, they were forced to submit, perhaps not unwillingly, to the loss of them. This was on the seventh of December, when it was Resolved to give hearty thanks to Cromwell for very great and eminently saithful services performed by him to this parliament and kingdom, both in this kingdom and the kingdom of Scotland, and Mr. Speaker did accordingly give him

the very hearty thanks of this house (s).

(FF) The reasons for purging the house of commons, and the apology for Cromwell on that head, are here to be given.] On the 11th of December the secluded and secured members published a printed paper, intituled 'A folemne protestation of the imprisoned and secluded members of the commons house: against the horrid force and violence of the officers and foldiers of the army, on Wednefday and Thursday, last, the 6th and 7th of December, 1648.' In this protestation 'They solemnly protest' and declare to the whole kingdom, that this execrable force and open violence upon their persons, and the whole house of commons, by the officers and army under their command, in marching up against their command and placing strong armed guards of horse and foot upon them, without, and against their order, was the highest and most detestable force and breach of priviledge and freedom ever offered to any parliament of England; and that all acts, ordinances, votes ' and proceedings of the faid house made fince the 6th of December aforesaid, or hereaster to be made during their restraint and forcible seclusion from the house, and the continuance of the armies force upon it, were ono way obligatory, but void and null to all intents and pur-

History of

P. 35.

Suffice it therefore to fay that the votes of no more purposes. And that all contrivers of, actors in, and affistants to this unparalleled force and treasonable armed violence, were open enemies to, and professed fubverters of the priviledges, rights and freedom of parliament, and disturbers of the peace and settlement of the kingdom; and ought to be proceeded against as fuch: and that all members of parliament and com-· moners of England, by their folemn covenant and duty, under pain of deepest perjury and eternal infamy, were obliged unanimonfly to oppose and endeavour to their utmost power to bring them to exemplary and condigne punishment for this transcendent offence, tending to the diffolution of the present, and subversion (1) Walker's of all future parliaments, and of the fundamental goe vernment and laws of the land (t).' This bold pro-Independentestation being complained of in the house of commons, cy, part ii. and the house of lords, produced a joint declaration from them, in which 'They judged and declared, the faid printed paper to be falfe, scandalous and seditious, and tending to destroy the visible fundamental government of the kingdom: and therefore ordered and ordained the faid printed paper to be suppressed; and all persons whatsoever that had had any hand in, or e given confent unto the contriving, framing, printing or publishing thereof, were adjudged uncapable to bear any office, or have any place of trust or authority in the kingdom, or to fit as members of either house of parliament. And they farther ordered, that every member of either house that were then absent, upon his first coming to sit in that house whereof he was a member, for the manifestation of his innocency, should disavow and disclaim, his having any hand in, or giving confent unto the contriving, framing, printing or publishing of the faid paper, or the matter therein contained (u).'---Here are no reasons we see given to justify the exclusion .- We must seek them elsewhere then, that is, in the writings of the advocates for

the

(w) Id. p. 36.

more addresses were re-assumed; the trans-

the army, and the admirers of the change which soon after happened. Besides those which may be collected from the petition in the foregoing note, the following have been offered to the public.

1. Mr. Lud'ow writes that ' Some of our commisfioners who had been with the King [at Newport] ' pleaded in the house for a concurrence with him, as if they had been employed by him; though others with more ingenuity acknowledged that they would onot advise an agreement upon those terms, were it not to prevent a greater evil that was like to enfue upon the refusal of them. But Sir Henry Vane so truly flated the matter of fact relating to the treaty, and for evidently discovered the design and deceit of the King's answer, that he made it clear to us, that by it the justice of our cause was not afferted, nor our rights secured for the future; concluding that if they should accept of these terms without the concurrence of the army, it would prove but a feather in their caps: onotwithstanding which, the corrupt party in the house having bargained for their own and the nation's liberty, resolved to break through all hazards and inconveniencies to make good their contract, and after twenty four hours debate, resolved by the plurality of votes, that the King's concessions were ground for a future fettlement. At which some of us expressing our diffatisfaction, defired that our protestation might be entered; but that being denied, as against the orders of the house, I contented myself to declare publicly, that being convinced that they had deferted the com-' mon cause and interest of the nation, I could no lone ger join with them; the rest of those who diffented also, expressing themselves much to the same purpose, . The day following, fome of the principal officers of the army came to Lindon, with expectation that things ' would be brought to this iffue; and confulting with fome members of parliament and others, it was con-

actions of the parliament with the King in the

cluded, after a full and free debate, that the measures taken by the parliament were contrary to the trust reposed in them, and tending to contract the guilt of the blood that had been shed upon themselves and the nation: that it was therefore the duty of the army to endeavour to put a stop to such proceedings; having engaged in the war, not simply as mercenaries, but out of judgment and conscience, being convinced that the cause in which they were engaged was just, and

(x) Vol. i. p. 269.

' that the good of the people was involved in it (x).' 2. In answer to the illegality of the act, and the incompetency of the actors, who affumed a jurifdiction to which they had no right, even from those for whose good and benefit they pretended to have done this: in answer to these and the like objections it was faid, 'That it was lawful for any man, even by violence, to wrest a sword out of the hand of a mad-man, though it be never so legally his from whom it is wrested;-"That there is no clyent that hath entertained a lawyer, or advocate to plead his cause, but upon discovery, ' yea or jealousy, of prevarication, or false-heartedness to him in his cause, may lawfully discharge him, his entertainment notwithstanding;—That it was ridicu-· lous to pretend a want of call from the people, against the lawfulness of such an act, which was of that sovereigne necessity for their benefit and good, as the actions of the army were; especially at such a time when there was no possibility of obtaining or receiving a formal call from the people, without running an eminent hazard of losing the opportunity for doing that excellent fervice to them. Mens confents unto all · acts manifestly tending to their relief, are sufficiently expressed in their wants and necessities. But the peo-"ple do not judge the proceedings of the army against the parliament-men as tending to their relief or welfare in any kind, but as contrary to both, nor do they give so much as their subsequent consents thereunto;

the isle of Wight condemned; the general was

-I answer that physicians called to the care and cure of perfons under diffempers, need not much stand upon the consents of such patients, either subsequent,

or antecedent, about what they administer unto them.
If the people be uncapable in themselves, of the things of their peace, it is an act of so much the more goode ness and mercy in those, who being fully capable of them, will engage themselves accordingly to make provision for them. It is a deed of charity and christianity, to fave the life of a lunatick or distracted perfon, even against his will. Besides it is a ruled case amongst wife men, that if a people be depraved and corrupt, so as to confer places of power and trust upon

wicked and undeferving men, they forfeit their power

in this behalf unto those that are good, though but a (y) John Goodwin's few (y). — Aquinas is referred to in the margin for this Right and curious doctrine, which perhaps will not be well relish. Might well ed by most of my readers. But to go on - That the judgment or fentence of the army upon these men, Lond. 16;8.

as meet to be dispossessed of their parliamentary inter-

eft, was not erroneous, but every way just, and according to the truth, stands clear upon this ground:

viz. That they were become renegadoes from their trust, and acted by their counsels, debates, votes, and interest, in a diametrical opposition to the peace and fafety of the kingdom, and to publick good.

Yea the tenour of their parliamentary actings before their removal from the house, in the known dialect of political prophecy, prefaged nothing but ruin and de ftruction, to the liberties of the free-born subjects of the kingdom in general, and to the lives and estates of many thousands in the kingdom, whom they stood bound in conscience in a special manner to protect.

For what could that grand encouragement, which they administred by their votes to a potent party of men

' in the kingdom, who had so lately, and with so high

an hand, acted hostility against the peace and liberties

(y) John Goodwin's Right and Might well met, p. 12— 15. 4to. was ordered to keep the King in fafe custo-dy, of the people, and against the lives of those who stood up to protect them, not having given the least over-' ture of any relenting in their old principles, but were onow through that extremity of pain which they lye under, having been fo often, and fo deeply bitten, and flung by the fidelity and valour of the army, moreenraged in their spirits, than ever; what could; I say, fuch encouragement, given by fuch hands unto fuch 6 men, but portend, either a re-imbroyling of this al-' ready miferably wasted nation, in wars and blood, orelse the necessity of a patient and quiet subjection of the nation to the iron yoke of perpetual tyranny and bondage, together with the certain ruin of the lives and estates of those, who had shewed most faithfule ness and courage in the defence of the parliament and ' the kingdom's liberties, in opposing the King and his e party, if the army had not preventingly interposed as ' they did? The by-past actions of men, especially fuch, which they have for any considerable space of time inured themselves unto, are prophetical of what their future actions are like to be, if opportunity paralleleth. The civil law faith, that he that hath injured one, hath threatned many: and by the rule of proportion, he that hath injured many hath threatned all (z).'

(z) John Goodwin's Right, &c. p. 18.

3. Mitton observes on this subject, that 'Emulations' are incident among military men, and are, if they exceed not, pardonable. But, adds he, some of the former army, eminent enough for their own martial deeds, and prevalent in the house of commons, touched with envy to be so far out done by a new model which they contemned, took advantage of Presbyterian and Independent names, and the virulence of some ministers, to raise disturbance. And the war being then ended, thought slightly to have discarded them, who had faithfully done the work, without their due pay, and the reward of their invincible valour.

dy, and take care that he go not away; and finally,

6 lour. But they who had the fword yet in their hands, ' disdaining to be made the first objects of ingratitude and oppression, after all that expence of their blood for justice and common liberty, seizing upon the King ' their prisoner, whom nothing but their matchless deeds ' had brought fo low as to furrender up his person: though he, to stir up new discord, chose rather to give up himself a captive to his own countrymen who had (a) Profe Works, vol.

· less won him (a).

This is taken from the Iconclastes. In his & Pra Po- i. p. 474pulo Anglicano Defensio,' after speaking in dispraise of the treaty in the isle of Wight, and of the members of the parliament who approved it, in terms of great feverity, he proceeds in the manner following: ' Quid illi interea e qui integri tam pestifera agitari consilia videbant? An ideo deesse patriæ, saluti suorum non prospicere debuerant, eo quod istius mali, contagio in ipsorum ordi-' nem penetraverat? At quis istos exclusit malè sanos? " Exercitus, inquis, Anglicanus,' id est, non externo-

' rum, sed fortissimorum & sidissimorum civium; quorum tribuni plerique, Senatores ipsi erant, quos illi boni exclusi patria ipsa excludendos, & in Hiberniam ' procul ablegandos esse censuerant; dum Scoti interim ' dubia jam fide quatuor Angliæ provincias suis finibus ' proximas magnis copiis infidebant, firmissima earum regionum oppida præsidiis tenebant, regem ipsum in ' custodia habebant: dum ipsi etiam factiones suorum ' atque tumultus, parlamento plusquam minaces, & in " urbe & in agris passim fovebant, qui tumultus paulò ' pôst in bellum non civile folum, sed & Scoticum illud erupere. Quòd siprivatis etiam consiliis aut armis 6 subvenire reipublicæ laudatissimum semper suit, non est s certè cur exercitus reprehendi, possit, qui parliamenti authoritate ad urbem accersitus imperata secit, & regiorum factionem atque tumultum ipsi curiæ sæpiùs mi-

' nitantem facile compescuit. In id autem discrimen ' adducta res erat, ut aut nos ab illis, aut illos à nobis finally, it was resolved to proceed capitally against him in a high court of justice to be erected opprimi necesse esset. Stabant ab illis Londinensium plerique inflitores atque opifices, & ministrorum factiosissimi quique; à nobis exercitus magna fide, modestià, virtute cognitus. Per hos cum retinere libertatem rempub. falutem liceret, an hæc omnia per ig-' naviam & stultitiam prodenda fuisse censes? Debellati regiarum partium duces arma quidam inviti, animum 6 hostilem non deposuerant: omnibus belli renovandi occasionibus intenti ad urbem se receperant. Cum his, quamvis inimicissimis, quamvis sanguinem eorum avide fitientibus, Presbyteriani, postquam non permitti fibi in omnes tam civilem quam ecclesiasticam domi-' nationem viderunt, clandestina consilia, & prioribus ' tum dictis tum sactis indignissima consociare coeperant: eóque acerbitatis processere, ut mallent se regi denuò ' mancipare, quam fratres suos in partem illam libertatis, quam & ipfi suo sub sanguine acquisiverant, ad-' mittere; mallent tyrannum tot civium crurore perfu-' fum, irâ in superstites, & conceptâ jam ultione arden-' tem rursus experiri dominum, quam fratres, & ami-' cissimos æquo jure serre sibi pares. - Soli Independentes e aui vocantes, & ad ultimum fibi constare, & sua uti ' victoria sciebant : qui ex rege hostem se secerat, eum ex hoste regem esse amplius, sapienter, meo quidem ' judicio, nolebant: neque pacem idcircò non volebant, ' sed involutum pacis nomine aut bellum novum, aut Works, vol. e æternam servitutem prudentes metuebant (b).' i. e. ' What did they do in the mean time, who were found themselves, and saw such pernicious councils on foot? 6 Ought they therefore to have been wanting to the nation, and not provide for its fafety, because the infec-' tion had spread itself even in their own house? But, who secluded those ill-affected members? I he Eng-" Lift army, you fay: so that it was not an army of foreigners, but of most valiant, and faithful, honest natives, whose officers for the most part were members of parliament; and whom those good secluded members would have fecluded their country, and banished ' into Ireland; while in the mean-time the Scots, whose alliance began to be doubtful, had very confiderable 6 forces in four of our northern counties, and kept garf risons in the best towns of those parts, and had the ' King himself in custody; whilst they likewise encours aged the tumultuating of those of their own faction, who did more than threaten the parliament, both in city and country, and through whose means not only a civil, but a war with Scotland too shortly after brake out. If it has always been counted praife-worthy in private men to affift the state and promote the public good; whether by advice or action; our army fure was in no fault, who being ordered by the parliament to come to town, obeyed and came, and when they were come, quelled with ease the faction and uproar 6 of the King's party, who fometimes threatned the house itself. For things were brought to that pass, that of necessity, either we must be run down by them, or they by us. They had on their fide most of the fhop-keepers and handicrafts-men of London, and e generally those of the ministers, that were most fac-' tious. On our fide was the army, whose fidelity, 6 moderation, and courage were fufficiently known. It being in our power by their means to retain our liberty, our state, our common safety; do you think we had not been fools to have loft all by our negligence and folly? They who had had places of command ' in the King's army, after their party were subdued, had laid down their arms indeed against their wills, but continued enemies to us in their hearts; and they · flocked to town, and were here watching all opportunities of renewing the war. With these men, tho' they were the greatest enemies they had in the world, and thirsted after their blood, did the Presbyterians, castle to Windsor, and in spight of the opposition made by the Scottish commissioners, brought because they were not permitted to exercise a civil, as ' well as an ecclesiastical jurisdiction over all others, ' hold fecret correspondence, and took measures very f unworthy of what they had formerly both faid and done; and they came to that spleen at last, that they . would rather enthral themselves to the King again, ' than admit their own brethren to share in their liberf ty, which they likewise had purchased at the price of their own blood; they chose rather to be lorded over. once more by a tyrant, polluted with the blood of fo many of his own fubjects, and who was enraged, and breathed out nothing but revenge against those of them that were left, than endure their brethren and friends to be upon the quare with them. The Independants, as they are called, were the only men that from first to last kept to their point, and knew what use to make of their victory. They refused, (and wifely, in my opinion) to make him King again, being then an enemy; who when he was their King, had made ! himself their enemy: nor were they ever the less averse to a peace, but they very prudently dreaded a f new war, or a perpetual flavery under the name of a f peace.

(h) Profe i. F. 3:4. for the purpose. In pursuance of these refolutions, the King was removed from Hurst castle

I will add but one passage more, and that taken from the declaration of the house of commons, setting forth the reasons for annulling all former votes in favour of a treaty with the King, which was passed, and ordered to be printed Jan. 15, 1648. In this declaration, after giving many reasons for their dislike of the treaty, they go on in the following manner: Neither can we believe, that any agreement we could have made with the King in the isle of Wight, in the condition he was then in, would ever have been observed, either by himself or any of his party: for, setting aside the bare name of honor, safety and freedom, which the treaty did pretend unto, neither the King, nor any of his,

brought to an open tryal at Westminster, where, after his refusal to acknowledge the autho-

did ever hold him in any other condition than that of a prisoner. For clearing whereof, besides his message ' fent to both houses, Oct. 2, in which ' he proposeth to have liberty to come to Westminster, and to be reflored to a condition of absolute freedom and safety; ' which can import no other than that he judged himfelf at that present, being in the time of treaty, to be deprived of both; his letters to a prime magistrate of I the city of London declare, ' that he held himself at ' that time as great a prisoner as ever:' and, the prince ' in his declaration made at Goree, fays plainly, ' that ' the King in truth is still a prisoner; and invites the Earl of Warwick to join with him to rescue his father from his unworthy imprisonment.' And fince enforced oaths are, in many mens judgments, not necessaf ry to be kept, what affurance could we have that he, who fo often had failed of his promifes made to us, when he was free and at his own disposal, would make s that good to us, when he came to be re-established in ' his royal power, which he had obliged himself to do, when he was in durance and a prisoner? And fince hardly any example can be produced, either foreign or domestick, of any prince, once engaged in a war with his subjects, that ever kept any agreement which he made with them any longer than meer necessity did compel him thereto. The examples to the contrary whereof are fo many and fo mainfest, and the late bloody violation of the peace betwixt the crown of Spain and those of Naples is so fresh in our memories, s as we cannot expect any propositions, agreed upon at the isle of Wight, should bind the King more than the fundamental laws, and his coronation oath; befides his often protestations and engagements in the name of a King, and of a gentleman, which he hath (c) Parliamentary for often violated (c).'—These were some of the History, principal reasons given in defence of an action generally vol. xviii.

con- p. 509.

authority of the court, he received sentence of death, which accordingly was put in execution.

condemned as impudent, base, and tyrannical. The reader who understands the history of these times, will be best able to judge of the truth of the pretences on which it is founded-All I shall fay is, if ruin was apprehended by these men to themselves or the kingdom; if their civil or religious rights, in their eyes, appeared as intended to be facrificed, and the King and the prieft, whether prelate or presbyter matterd not, were to reassume their wonted rule; and above all, if the King's character appeared such to them, that no reliance was to be put on his promises, declarations or oaths, (all which they feem strongly to affirm) we are not to wonder at the deed. All men know the force of necessity and felf preservation, and know also that they will operate more strongly than law or reason, if indeed they be not almost superiour to all law. To plead this in bar of those, will seldom be thought valid by men versed in great affairs, and, though it be made use of by them fometimes for purposes of their own, yet is it little credited and believed by themselves. That the army really feared a treaty between the King and the parliament, is certain-How far their fears were just in themfelves, or will justify their proceedings in this matter, the public must determine. Thus much for the fact itself. In defence of Cromwell, who is supposed to have been at the bottom of it, it is urged, ' That there was a party in the parliament that bore an early spleen e against him, and fain would have nipt him in the bud; but his eminent fervice at Naseby procuring him to be appointed and continued lieutenant-general under Fairfax; the continual successes that attended him from that time forward, fet him above their machianations. Nevertheless, they did not erase out of his breast, the remembrance of the kindnesses they would have done him; nor did their flatteries of his profs perity make him the more neglectful of standing "upon cution. In all these transactions Cromwell had upon his guard. And it was as warrantable for Crom-well to secure himself from the contrivances of his enemies in a shattered parliament, of which he had fo long before fuch timely notice; as it was for them 6 to feek his ruin. For they were not his fovereigns but his equals. When he found that his prosperous atchievements raifed him enemies on every fide; that they who were most beholding to his victorious suc-' cesses, combined with the greatest animosity to his destruction; 'twas time for him then to look about him, and to oppose their undermining devices with countermines of the fame nature. Nor does it ape pear by any proof that carries authority with it, that he pretended to fingle greatness till he was forced to it for his own fafety. It is agreed by the author of the Memoirs himself [Ludlow] that Cromwell offered 6 more candid and easy conditions to the King than the Presbyterian party did; which if the King had accepted (and it does not appear to be Cromwell's fault that he did not) Cromwell himself had then put a stop to all his fingle advancement; whereas he would fureby have taken another courfe, had he at that time meditated fingle sovereignty; but the King, who was de-' figned by fate to be a victim to evil counsel, refused ' those offers, trusting to vainer hopes. On the other fide, it was manifest that the Presbyterian party aimed s at nothing more than their own advancement by their felling the bishops lands, and when they came to treat with the King, by their fo stifly adhering to their proposition for the abolishing of episcopacy, knowing there could be no bishops without maintenance, and that then they must be the paramount clergy. But then (indeed) Cromwell perceiving that it was not fafe 6 to rely on the King, nor willing to truckle under a e party that were treating for their own advancement upon his ruins, 'tis rational to believe, that from that time forward he began to look upon the King as a · COII-

47. 4to.

had (GG) a principal hand.—His name for conquered Prince, and that none could better supply (d) Modest his room than the person who had subdued him (d). Vindication of O. Crom- This feems no ill-made apology.

well, p. 45.

(GG) In all these transactions Cromwell had a princi-Lond, 1698. pal hand.] After the seclusion of the members who promoted the treaty with the King, it was natural to expect that his Majesty never more would be permitted to bear rule. But it did not once, I believe, enter into the thoughts of him or his adherents, that he would be brought before a court of justice, tried, and executed in an open and public manner. Yet all this we know happened, to the very great amazement of many. part Cromwell had in these transactions comes now to be related. 'When it was first moved in the house of commons to proceed capitally against the King, Cromwell stood up and told them, that if any man moved this upon design, he should think him the greatest traytor in the world; but fince providence and necesfity had cast them upon it, he should pray God to bless their counsels, though he were not provided on the fudden to give them counsel (e).'- The follow-Independenting anecdote from Burnet will shew that he had well confidered the reasons and grounds of the proceeding. Lieutenant-general Drummond, afterwards Lord Strathallan, was the relator. This gentleman ' happened to be with Cromwell when the commissioners sent from Scotand to protest against the putting the King to death came to argue the matter with him. Cromwell bade Drummond stay and hear their conference, which he did. They began in a heavy languid style to lay indeed great loads upon the King: but they still insisted on that clause in the covenant, by which they swore they would be faithful in the preservation of his Ma-' jesties person. With this they shewed upon what terms Scotland, as well as the two houses, had engaged in the war, and what folemn declarations of their f zeal and duty to the King they all along published; which for this has been greatly reproached, though which would now appear to the scandal and reproach of the christian name, to have been false pretences, if when the King was in their power they should proceed to extremities. Upon this Cromwell entered into a long discourse of the nature of the regal power, according to the principles of Mariana and Buchanan: he thought a breach of trust in a King ought to be punished more than any other crime whatfoever. He said, as to their ' covenant, they swore to the preservation of the King's e person in the defence of the true religion: if then it appeared that the fettlement of the true religion was obstructed by the King, so that they could not come at it but by putting him out of the way, then their oath could not bind them to the preferving him any c longer. He said also, their covenant did bind them to bring all malignants, incendiaries, and enemies to the cause, to condign punishment: and was not this to be executed impartially? What were all those on whom public justice had been done, especially those who suffered for joining Montrose, but small offenders acting by commission from the King, who was therefore the principal, and fo the most guilty? Drum-" mond faid, Cromwell had plainly the better of them 'at 'their own weapon, and upon their own princi'ples (f).'——On the 21 Jan. 1648, old style, Hugh p. 61.

(e) Walker's History of cy, part ii. P. 54.

Peters preaching at Whitehall, upon 'Bind your Kings with chains, and your nobles in fetters of iron;' and talking, in his bold manner, concerning the King's being liable to the law as well as other men, Cromwell was (g) Exact observed to laugh (g). And when on the motion of Mr. Narrative of Downes, on the last day of the trial, the court adjourn- the Tryal of ed into the court of wards, and was pressed in the most the Regipathetic terms by him, to give the King liberty to make 168. fome proposition to the parliament for the settlement of the kingdom, as his Majesty had in court just before defired : after Mr. Downes had urged this, & Cromwell 4 did answer with a great deal of storm. He told the

there were not wanting men of ability, at orefident that now he faw what great reason the gentleman had to put fuch a great trouble upon them;

(b) Exact and perfect Narrative. &c. p. #61.

(i) Id. D. 269.

faith he, fure he doth not know that he hath to do with the hardest hearted man that lives upon the earth; 6 however it is not fit that the court should be hindred from their duty by one peevish man; he said the bottom was known, that I would fain fave his old mafter, and defired the court without any more ado, 'would go and do their duty (h).' Mr. Wayte, another of the King's judges, fays 'Cromwell laughed and jeered, and smiled, in the court of wards on this occa-' fion.' He afterwards adds, ' That being told by Lord Gray that the King would not dye, the next day he went to the house, they were labouring to get ' hands for his execution at the door. I refused, and ' went into the house; faith Cromwell, those that are ' gone in shall set their hands, I will have their hands ' now (i).' Colonel Ingoldsby was a relation of Cromwell's, and named a judge: but difliking the action, he always absented himself. But the day after the sentence was pronounced, having occasion to go to the painted chamber, 'he saw Cromwell, and the rest of those ' who had fate upon the King, and were then, as he found afterwards, affembled to fign the warrant for the King's death. As foon as Cromwell's eyes were ' upon him, he run to him, and taking him by the hand, drew him by force to the table; and faid, 'Though he had escaped him all the while before, he ' should now sign that paper as well as they; which he, ' feeing what it was, refused with great passion; saying, he knew nothing of the business; and offered to ' go away. But Cronwell, and others, held him by ' violence; and Cromwell with a loud laughter, taking ' his hand in his, and putting the pen between his finegers, with his own hand writ Richard Ingoldsby, he " making all the refistance he could (k)."——An exact copy of the warrant for the King's execution was published

(2) Clarendon, vol. vi. P. 763.

lished by the society of antiquaries of London, a few years fince: in which it appears that the names of fome persons who had figned it were erased, and other names inferted, and that the day, as well as the officers who were to fee to the execution of it, were changed. Cromwell's name flands third on the warrant. - But to go on: Colonel Huncks declares, 'That a little before the King's execution, he was in Ireton's chamber, where · Ireton and Harrison were in bed together; there was Cromwell, colonel Hacker, heutenant-colonel Phayer, 4 Axtell and himself standing at the door, the warrant for the execution was there produced, and Mr. Hacker ' was reading of it, but Cromwell addressed himself to him [Huncks] commanding him by virtue of that warrant, to draw up an order for the executioner. I re-' fused it, adds he, and upon refusing of it, there hape pened some cross passages. Cromwell would have no delay. There was a little table that stood by the door, and pen, ink, and paper being there, Cromwell flept, and writ (I conceive he wrote that which he would have had me to write) as foon as he had done writing, he gives the pen over to Hacker, Hacker he · stoops and did write (I cannot say what he writ) away goes Cromwell, and then Axtell; we all went out, afferwards they went into another room; immediately the King came out, and was murthered (1).' The (1) P. 221. following relation (if it had not been contrary to Huncks's account) is of too doubtful an authority to be absolutely relied on, though in a work of this nature it cannot well be omitted. While these things were acting, ' [the fitting the scaffold for the King's execution] the Lord Fairfax, who had always forborn any public e appearance in the practices of this murther, had taken up (as is credibly reported) some resolutions, (either in abhorrency of the crime, or by the follicitations of others) with his own regiment, though none else 6 should follow him, to hinder the execution. This being suspected or known, Cromwell, Ireton and Har-' rison coming to him, after their usual way of deceiving, endeavoured to perswade him, that the Lord had rejected the King, and with such like language as they knew that!(HH) time, to defend his conduct. The King knew had formerly prevailed upon him; concealing that they had that very morning figned the warrant for the affaffination; they also defired him with them; to · feek the Lord by prayer, that they might know his ' mind in the thing: Which he affenting to, Harrison was appointed for the duty, and by compact to draw out his prophane and blasphemous discourse to God in fuch a length as might give time for the execution, which they privately fent their instrument to hasten : 6 of which when they had notice that it was passed. they rose up, and perswaded the general that this was a full return of prayer, and God having fo manifested of Charles I. his pleasure they were to acquiesce in it (m). The writer of this was but little acquainted with Harrison's character, when he describes him as drawing out his prayer by compact, in order to gain time for the execution. Harrison was bold, artless, honest and highly enthusiastical, and therefore the unfittest man in the world to act a part. Whether the other parts of the story are more probable, the confiderate reader will determine. These passages are, I think, sufficient to shew the part Cromwell had in this affair, though after all, Burnet afferts, 'That Ireton was the person that drove it on: for Cromwell was all the while in some suspence about (n) History of his own Times, vol. i. p. 69.

60 it (n).

1,12012

(m) Perip-chief's Life

P. 57.

recorded in history has been more censured than the execution of Charles. Dr. Fell calls it a ' horrid mockery' of justice, the rape and violence of all that's facred, ' made more abominable by pretending to right and piety; in order to prevent which, he fays Dr. Hammond drew up an address to the general and council of officers, and transmitted it to them (o).'---And the ministers of London, alarmed at the proceedings against the King, published a vindication of themselves against the unjust aspersions cast upon their former actings for the parliament, as if they had promoted the bringing of

the

(HH) His name has been reproached, &c.] No fact

(o) Life of Hammond, P. 55. 12mo. 1651.

King-being thus executed, that part of the house

the King to capital punishment. In this vindication they fay, ' They hold themselves bound in duty to God, religion, the King, parliament and kingdom, to profels before God, angels and men, that we verily be-Ilieve that which is fo much feared to be now in agitation, the taking away the life of the King, in the f present way of tryal, is not only not agreeable to any word of God, the principles of the protestant religion (never yet stained with the least drop of blood of a king) or the fundamental constitution and government 6. of this kingdom; but contrary to them, as also to the oath of allegiance, the protestation of May 5, 1641, and the folemn league and covenant: from all, or any of which engagements, we know not any power on earth, able to absolve us or others. Therefore, fay they, according to our covenant, we do, in the 6 name of the great God (to whom all must give a firich account) warn and exhort all who either more immediately belong to our respective charges, or any way depend on our ministry, or to whom we have administred the said covenant (that we may not by our filence fuffer them to run upon that highly provoking fin of perjury) to keep close to the ways of God, and the rules of religion, the laws, and their · vows, in their constant maintaining the true reformed religion, the fundamental constitution and government of this kingdom (not fuffering themselves to be seduced from it, by being drawn in to subscribe the late models or agreement of the people, which directly tends to the utter subversion of the whole frame of the fundamental government of the land, and makes way for ' an universal toleration of all heresies and blasphemies, directly contrary to our covenant, if they can but get their abettors to cover them under a false guife of the 6 christian religion) as also in preserving the priviledges of both houses of parliament, and the union between the two nations of England, and Scotland; to mourn house of commons which remained by the bitterly for their own fins, and the fins of the city, s army, parliament, and kingdom, and the woful milcarriages of the King himself, (which we cannot but - acknowledge to have been very great) in his government, that have cost the three kingdoms fo dear, and s cast him down from his excellency into an horrid "pit of mifery, almost beyond example: and to pray that God would both give him effectual repentance, and fanctify the bitter cup of divine displeasure, that the divine providence hath put into his hand; as also that God would restrain the violence of men, that they may not dare to draw upon themselves and the kingdom, the blood of their fovereign. This bold piece, in such a critical conjuncture, raised the indignation and refentment of the house of commons, (for the house of lords had unanimously resused to meddle with the business, and for that reason it had been voted, 'That the commons of England in parliament affembled, have the fupream power in the nation)' who constituted a committee, among whom were Cromwell and Ireton, "To examine the authors, publishers, prinsters; and subscribers to the faid book; and by what f means the subscriptions to the said book were obtained, e and by whom: and the committee were likewife to have power to take information of fuch as have als ready preached, published, or printed, feditiously, the " proceedings in bringing the King to justice: and also to bring in an ordinance to reftrain public preaching and printing any thing against the proceedings of the shouse, and the high court of justice, in relation to ' bring - - - the King to justice (p). But nothing could hinder men from declaring their diffike to the deed. I hey reproached, they reviled, they threatned, and did every thing to make Cromwell and his fellows odious and abominable in the eyes of the whole world. Take a fpecimen from a sermon entitled 'The Martyrdome of King Charles, or his conformity with Christ in his sufferings, preached at Bredagh, before his Majesty of Great Britain, and the Princess of Orange, June 3-13, (a) Printed 1649 (q).' By Henry, Lord Bishop of Down and Con- Hague, by nce, in the kingdom of Ireland .- ' As the murtherers of Samuel our fovereign, fays he, resemble the crucifiers of our Brown, and Saviour: for we find them all assigns the force corre Saviour; so we find them all acting the same parts. London, · And first Judas, who fold his master, of all that con- 1649. fpired against Christ, is most odious; for he was his disciple, a domestick servant, one whom he trusted with his purse; and yet he, his familiar friend, who did eat of his bread, lift up the heele against him. · So our fovereign was fold at a greater price than our Saviour, by those who had as neere a relation unto him, as Judas had unto Christ: for they were his countrymen, brought up with him, his fervants and familiar friends, whom he trusted with his purse, with his counfels, and his person, cherished in his bosome, and inriched with many princely favours. In many · respects they were far worse than Judas. —From Ju-' das come we to the great counsel. The parliament is ' that great counsel, and hath acted all and more against their Lord and fovereign, than the other did against 'Christ: they consulted how to put him to death, gave money to betray him, fent foldiers to apprehend him. In that great counsel, Annas and Caiphos were chief; in this Cromwell and Ireton; and Cromwell prophefied as Caiphas did, using almost the same words, It is expedient that he die, and unless he die the na-' tion will perish. Bradshaw and Cooke are the scribes and lawyers who fiercely perfued him: they curse themfelves with his blood, as the others did with Christ's: ' for Bradshaw spoke to this purpose on the bench: · Our lives are threatned if we meddle with his blood; but whatsoever shall befall us, we will do justice up-' on him. And is not this just as the scribes and phafrifees faid, His blood be upon us and on our children. " Fairfax was Pilat the governor, who seemed unwilmy, assumed the supream power of the nation,

(p) Joannal, Feb. 3, 1648. permission, and with the support of the army,

Ing to confent to his death, and fought to wash his hands of his blood by laying it upon others. And his wife Lady Pilat, who diffwaded the murther of our fovereign, more than the other did the killing of · Christ. The army are the foldiers who apprehended him, watched him, mocked him, reviled him, crying justice and execution against him, and at last crucified him, and parted his garments amongst them. And London is the great city spiritually Sodome, where our Lord was crucified.'- The preacher in the conclusion, addressing himself to the King [Charles II.] says, God in his own good time, will certainly, Sir, look upon the justice of your cause-For your cause is God's cause. And as it is God's cause, so it is the cause of all Kings: they are deeply concerned in it, and ought to pursue those bloody paracides.' This language may found harsh, but is softer than secretary Nicholas's, who stiled them ' Devils (r).' mond's State Papers, by Carte, vol. i. P. 255.

(r) Or-

And in an act of parliament passed soon after the restoration of Charles II. the execution of the King is stiled. 6 An horrid and execrable murder, an unparalleled ' treason,' which the said parliament did ' renounce, abominate and protest against:' and it was declared, That by the undoubted and fundamental laws of the kingdom, neither the peers of the realm, nor the commons, nor both together in parliament, nor the e people collectively, nor representatively, nor any other e person whatsoever, ever had, have, or ought to have, a coercive power over the persons of the Kings of this realm'.- And in virtue of this doctrine, Cromwell and many other of the King's judges were attainted of high treason, and some suffered as traytors for consenting to his death. It would be tedious as well as endless to reckon up the reproaches which have been cast on Cromwell for this action: fuffice it to fay that the bigots, the time fervers, the party men, and many of the honest and sensible men of most denominations, have joined nation, in the way of a free state. The kingly power and house of peers, by the authoin the cry, and represented him as one of the most wicked of men.—But, though men's prejudices ran very high at the time of Charles's death, yet wanted there not advocates to defend the deed. Some of their reasons the truth of history requires me to recite, though I am no way answerable for the conclusiveness of them.

1. It was faid, 'That the people, (I mean collec-' tively taken) have no law of nature, or of God upon them, which prohibiteth them from laying afide a King, or kingly governor, from amongst them, when they have a reasonable cause for it. Such a cause as ' this they have (I mean that which is just, and reasonable, and competent) for fo doing, when either they find, by experience, that government by kings hath been a nuisance to the peace or liberties of the peof ple, and apprehend, by reason, that, if continued, it is like still so to be; or find, that the charge of maintaining fuch a government, hath been, and, if continued, is like to be (for the future) over burthenfome to the state, conceiving, upon good grounds, withal, that another form of government will accommodate the interest of the state upon equal or better terms, with less charge and expence; especially when they find, that the government we speak of is e gotten into a race or blood, that is unfit for government, as that which, for feveral descents together, as in father, in son, in son's son, &c. is either boiled up into, and breaks out in oppression and tyranny, or else turns to a water of natural simplicity and weake ness, or froths into voluptuousness and luxury, or the blike; in all these cases (I say) and many others like unto thefe, a people or state, formerly governed by kings, may very lawfully turn these servants of theirs out of their doors, as the Romans of old, and the P 3 authority of this commonwealth, were abo-

(s) Goodwin's Defence of the Sentence passed upon the late King, p. 12. Lond. 40. 1649. Hollanders of late (besides many nations more) have done, and are blameless (s).

2. 'Though it should be supposed, that the Kingfimply and absolutely is superiour to his people, yet, having entered into a civil, sea, and facred covenant and bond with them, the breach hereof on his part giveth unto them a lawfulnesse of right or power, to compel him to the terms of his agreement, or to make fatisfaction for his violation of them .- And though it should be granted, that a king is either equal or superiour in power to his people in parliament, yet, being degenerated into a tyrant, be is neither. Whether the king be fuch, it is the right of the people, by their representatives, to declare. For, where there is no opportunity for the interpolure of other judges, the law of nature and of nation, alloweth every man to judge in his own case. Even as the late King took upon him to be judge in his own case; when he sentenced all those who served in the wars on the parliament's fide against him, for rebels and traytors, and commanded execution accordingly. That supposing the parliament (on account of the force put on it by the army, and the abolifningthe house of lords) by whose authority the high courts of justice was founded and created, was no formal, legal or compleat parliament, yet will not this neither disable the justice or righteousnesse of the sentence; unlesse it could be further supposed (which apparent truth prohibiteth any man to suppose) that there were some other magistrate, one, or more, superiour in place and authority to this parliament, who, probably, would either have erected a like court of justice for the same end (the capital tryall of the King). or else have called him to the bar of some court of justice already established, and prosecuted the same. tryal here. For, doubtlesse, the execution of justice. and judgment is so absolutely and effentially necessary lished, the lands of the crown fold, with

to the preservation and well-being of a state, or body politique, that both the law of God and nature doth not only allow it in any member, one, or more, of such a body, in their order, turn, and course, (when those, who are peculiarly deputed for such execution, shall neglect or resule it, as, viz. magistrates and win's Dejudges) (1) but even calleth them unto it, and reafence, Acc.

quireth it at their hands, in such cases."

3. As to the clause in the covenant, which bound them to preserve the King's person, it was faid, 'That, in the then circumstances, neither the preservation of on the liberties of the kingdom, nor the bringing des' linquents to punishment (to which, by the same cove-' nant, they were bound) were confifent therewith, and confequently was unfit to be observed by them. Late and lamentable experience,' fays the writer, just quoted. Thewed how near the liberties of the kingdom were to ruin, by occasion of the preservation of the King's person only (and that only for a season) though This authority was kept under hatches. It was the preservation of his person that gave life, and breath, and being, to those dangerous insurrections in Kent, Effex, London, Surry, Wales, &c. by, means, whereof there was but a step between the liberties of the kingof dom and perpetual enflavement. It was the preferevation of his person (with hope of restitution of his sauthority) that administred strength unto Sectland toconceive the conquest of England, and to make the e attempt, by invading it with an army of about (if -" not above) 30000 men: unto whose teeth (doubtlesse) this nation had been a prey, had they not fought from heaven, had not the flars in their courses fought sagainst them. And had his person still been preserved (especially with his authority) according to all experiments which the world hath made, and had, in fuch cases, yea, according to all principles, as well of re-" ligion, as of reason and policy, it would have been a

the jewels and paintings belonging to Charles I.

fpring or fountain of bitter waters unto the land, and a darkening of the light in the heavens thereof. And, inflead of bringing delinquents to condign punishment, it cannot, in any rational construction, but be supposed, that it would have been the lifting up the heads of such persons unto undeserved places of ho-

(u) Goodwin's Defence, &c. P. $5.

6 nour (u). 4. 'Never,' fays Mr. Goodwin, 'was any person, under heaven, sentenced with death upon more equitable or just grounds, in respect of guilt or demerit. -- He that is the architect and mafter-workman in e raising an unnecessary or unjust war, makes himfelf the first-born of murtherers, and is responsible both to God and men, for all the blood that is shed in this war. If kings might make war upon their sube jects, when, and upon what pretences, they please, and then be justified and acquitted from all outrages of blood, and other villanies, perpetrated in this war, one fin might make an atonement for another; yea one great fin a cloak and covering for many. The late wars, wherein the King, by the fword of those e men of blood, who cast in their lot with him, shed fo much innocent blood in the land, being caufelefly, and contrary to the frequent obtestations, humble petitions, earnest sollicitations, grave advisements of his e great councel (the parliament) commenced by himfelf, are fo far from mediating for the blood shed, on his behalf, that they open the mouth of it the wider, and cause it to cry so much the louder for vengeance upon him, and his, both unto God and men (x). And the parliament, after giving a short detail of Charles's behaviour in his government, adds, 'Upon all these, and many other unparalleled offences, upon his breach of faith, of oaths and protestations, upon the cry of the blood of Ireland and of England, upon the tears of widows and orphans, and childless parents, and millions of persons undone by him, let all the world of indifferent men judge, whether the parliament had not sufficient cause to bring the King to Djuffice (y) ion

(x) Goodwin's Defence, &c. p. 98. I and every mark of ignominy and contempt

5. 'I ask,' fays Milton, 'by what conscience, or di-'vinity, or law, or reason, a state is bound to leave all these facred concernments under a perpetual hazard and extremity of danger, rather than cut off a wicked prince, who fits plotting day and night to subvert them. They tell us, that the law of nature justifies any man to defend himself, even against the King in person: let them shew us then, why the same law may not justify much more a state or whole people, to do justice upon him, against whom each private man may lawfully defend himself; seeing all kind of justice done is a defence to good men, as well as a punishment to bad; and justice done upon a tyrant is no more but the necessary felf-defence of a whole commonwealth. To war upon a king, that his inftruments may be brought to condign punishment, and thereafter to punish them the instruments, and not to spare only, but defend and honour him the fauthor, is the strangest piece of justice to be called christian, and the strangest piece of reason to be called human, that, by men of reverence and learning, works, vol.

• ever yet was vented (2).

6, As to the objection, that many members of parliament were, by force, excluded, the privilege of it highly broken, and they who were permitted to fit in parliament acted still under a force, and were upon their good behaviour: as to this, it was by the parliament replied, That every parliament ought to act · upon their good behaviour; and few have acted, but · fome kind of force hath at one time or other been tempt cast on his name, family, and government.

⁽v) Declaration of the parliament of England, expressing the grounds of their late proceedings, and of fettling the prefent government in the way of a free state, p. 13. 4to. London, March 22, 1648.

supon them; and most of them under the force of tyrannical will, and fear of ruine by displeasure thereof; some under the force of several factions or titles to the crown: yet the laws made, even by fuch par-· liaments, have continued, and been received, and be-' neficial to succeeding ages. All-which, and whatfor ever hath been done by this parliament, fince fome of their members deferted them, and the late King raifed forces against them, and several disorders and affronts formerly offered to them (if this objection take place) s are wholly vacated. For any breach of privilege of parliament, it will not be charged upon the remaining part, or to have been within their power of prevention or reparation; or that they have not enjoyed the freedom of their own persons and votes, and are, undoubtedly, by the law of parliaments, far ex-E ceeding that number which makes a house, authorised for the dispatch of any business whatsoever : and that; which at prefent is called a force upon them, is some of their best friends, called and appointed by the par-· liament for their fafety, and for the guard of them s against their enemies; who, by this means, being disappointed of their hopes to destroy the parliaments would, nevertheless, scandalize their actions, as done under a force, who, in truth, are no other than their -own guards of their own army, by themselves apspointed: and, when it fell into confideration, whether the priviledge of parliament, or the fafety of the kingf dom, should be preferred, it is not hard to judge which ought to fway the ballance; and that the parliaf ment ought to pass by the breach of priviledge (as had been formerly often done upon much smaller f grounds) rather than, by a fullen declining their duty a) Declara- and trust, to refign up all to the apparent hazard of ruin and confusion of the nation (a). These were the principal reasons at that time given for this most extraordinary action. The reader will judge of their force,

sion, &c. p. 22.

vernment. To conciliate men to their proceedings.

force, and determine whether they answer the objections founded on the illegality and violence of the proceeding. It should be observed, however, that the abettors of it gloried that it was performed in the eye of the world, and that an example was fet to posterity how to act in fimilar circumstances. There want not precedents of some of his predecessors, faid they, who have been deposed by parliaments, but were afterwards in darkness, and in corners, basely murthered. .. This parliament held it more agreeable to honour and justice, to give the King a fair and open trial, by above an hundred gentlemen, in the most publick place of justice, free (if he had so (b) Declara-' pleased) to make his defence (b). 'If the parliation, &c. e ment and military council do what they do without P. 14. sprecedent, fays Milton, sif it appear their duty it argues the more wisdom, virtue and magnanimity; that they know themselves able to be a precedent to others, who, perhaps, in future ages, if they prove onot too degenerate, will look up with honour, and aspire towards these exemplary and matchless deeds of their ancestors, as to the highest top of their civil. glory and emulation; which, heretofore, in the pur-' fuance of fame and foreign dominion, spent itself vain-glorioully abroad; but, henceforth, may learn a better fortitude, to dare execute highest justice on them that shall, by force of arms, endeavour the oppressing and bereaving of religion and their liberty at home; that no unbridled potentate or tyrant, but to his for-' row, for the future, may prefume fuch high and irrefponfible licence over mankind, to havoc and turn upfide whole kingdoms of men, as though they were on more, in respect of his perverse will, than a nation of pilmires (e). The time was, faid another (c) Profe Works, voj. commonwealth advocate, when this nation was wed-i. p. 356. ded to the vanity of admiring kings, placing them in a lofty feat of impunity, like gods, that were not bound

ceedings, and make them submit to their rule, they began (11) with fair promises,

6 bound to give men an account of their actions, but had a liberty to thunder at pleasure, and put the world into combustion, so that there was no love but lust, ono rule but the prince's will, which so vassalized the fpirits of this great and mighty people, that they were content to establish the highest piece of injustice by fuch maxims of law, as faid, the King can do no wrong; as if whatfoever he did could not make him a delinquent or a traitor; nor was it law only, but those antiquated cheats of the clergy made it pass for divinity also; so that the commonwealth of England, for almost fix hundred years, hath been pinioned like a captive with the twofold cord of the law and the e gospel, which the corrupt professors have made use of after their own inventions. Yet, notwithstanding that this glorious idol of royalty was elevated to such a height over the liberties of the parliament, and fet upon the very pinacle of the temple, we have lived to fee a noble generation of English hearts, that have fetched it down with a vengeance, and cured the land (d) Mercu- c of that idolatry, by one of the most heroic and exemplary acts of justice, that ever was done under the " fun (d)."

rius Politicus, No. 56. p. 886.

I shall only add, that, in the year 1651, O. S. the 30th of January was observed, by the English merchants at Dantzick, in memorial of their deliverance from flavery, and a feaft was made for the whole company, ve) Thurloe, the expence of which was ordered to be repaid by the

vol. i. p. commonwealth of England (e). 554, 555.

(11) They began with fair promises, and expressed, at the fame time, much refolution After it had been determined to bring the King to a trial, the house of commons acted with great spirit and rigour. They declared, that the commons of England, in parliament affembled, being chosen by, and representing, the people, have the supreme power in the nation (f). They resolved, that

(f) Jourmal, 4th Jan: 1548.

OLIVER CROMWELL.

and expressed, at the same time, much resolution. Nor were they worse than their

a great feal be graven, with the addition of a map of the kingdom of Ireland, and of Ferjey and Guernfey, together with the map of England; and, in some convenient place on that fide, the arms by which the kingdoms of England and Ireland are differenced from other kingdoms. That, on the map fide of the great feal, the inscription shall be, 'The Great Seal of England, 1648.' That the inscription, on the other side of the seal, on which the sculpture of the house of commons is engraven, shall be this, viz. 'In the first year of freedom, by God's blef- (e) Journal, fing restored (g). Sixty pounds were charged on the 9th of Jan. revenue towards the charges of this seal.—On the 1643. 17th of March, after the King's execution, an act was passed 'for abolishing the kingly office,' and it was declared, 'high treason in any one to endeavour to set up any of the late King's children, or any other, perfon to be King of England and Ireland; and that whofoever should be convicted of the said offence, should be deemed and adjudged a traitor against the parlia- (b) Scobel's ment and people of England (b). And, that no collection, hopes might be given of the restoration of monarchy, March, care was taken to demolish its great support the house 1648. of peers, which was declared to be useless and dane gerous to the people of England: and it was enacted, 'That the lords should not from thenceforth meet or fit in the house called the lords house, or in any other house or place whatsoever, as a house of lords; nor ' should fit, vote, advise, adjudge or determine of any e matter or thing whatfoever, as a house of lords, in e parliament (i). They, moreover, pulled down the (i) Id. ib. statues of Charles at St. Paul's and in the Royal Exchange, and put in the nich of the latter, Exit Tyrannus regum ultimus: imitating the Syracusians, who, at the invitation of Timoleon, overturned the palaces and moinvitation of Timoleon, overturned the palaces and moin Timoin Timoimory of former tyrants (k). These were very leon.

bold

words: for, 'tis very certain, great things were bold and high acts, and such as needed an apology to the nation and the world. Accordingly a declaration was prepared and printed, in which the grounds of their proceedings were laid open in the best manner they were able. And the better to reconcile the people to their actions, and conciliate their effeem to their authority, they spoke them fair, and promised them largely. After having in the declaration vindicated their feveral actions, they proceed in the following manner: ' The " fum of all the parliament's defign and endeavour in the ' present change of government from tyranny to a freeflate; and which they intend not only to declare in words, but really and speedily endeavour to bring to effect, is this; to prevent a new war, and further expence and effusion of the treasure and blood of Eng-'s land; and to establish a firm and safe peace, and an oblivion of all rancour and ill will occasioned by the · late troubles: to provide for the due worship of God, e according to his word, the advancement of the true · protestant religion, and for the liberal and certain · maintenance of godly ministers: to-procure a just liberty for the consciences, persons and estates of all ' men, conformable to God's glory and their own peace: to endeavour vizo oully the punishment of the cruel · murtherers in Ireland; and the restoring of the honest protestants, and this commonwealth, to their rights there, and the full fatisfaction of all engagements for this work: to provide for the fettling and just observ-6 ing of treaties and alliances with foreign princes and flates, for the encouragement of manufactures, for the increase and flourishing of trades at home, and · the maintenance of the poor in all places of the land: to take care for the due reformation and administration of the law and publique justice, that the evil may be "punished and the good rewarded: to order the reveonue in fuch a way, that the publ que charges may be · defrayed, the foldiers pay juffly and duly fettled, that · free were done by them, and fuch as were very much to their honour. Witness the profecution

free quarter? may be wholly taken away, the people be eased in their burthens and taxes, and the debts of the commonwealth be justly fatisfied; to remove all e grievances and oppressions of the people, and to establish peace and righteousness in the land. These being their only ends, they cannot doubt of, and humbly e pray to the Almighty Power: for his affiftance and bleffing upon their mean endeavours, wherein, as they have not envied nor intermeddled; nor do intend at all to intermeddle, with the affairs of government of any other kingdom or state; or to give any offence or just provocation to their neighbours, with whom they defire entirely to preserve all fair correspondence and amity, if they please; and confine themselves to the proper work, the managing of the affairs, and ordering the govern-" ment of this commonwealth, and matters in order thereunto, with which they are intrusted and autho-& tifed by the confent of all the people thereof, whose representatives by election they are. So they do prefume upon the like fair and equal dealing from abroad; and that they, who are not concerned, will not interopole in the affairs of England, who doth not interpole in theirs: and, in case of any injury, they doubt not, but by the courage and power of the English nation, ' and the good bleffing of God (who hath hitherto mi-' raculously owned the justness of their cause, and, they hope, will continue to do the same) they shall be " fufficiently enabled to make their full defence, and to " maintain their own rights. And they do expect from 4 all true hearted Englishmen, not only a forbearance of " any publique or fecret plots or endeavours, in oppofition to the present settlement, and thereby to kindle ' new flames of war and mifery amongst us, whereof themselves must have a share; but a chearful concur-" rence and a ling for the establishment of the great work now in hand, in such a way, that the name of cution of the war in Ireland, under the command (KK) of Cromwell, their lieutenant-

God may be honoured, the true protestant religion (I) Declaration, March 22, 1648. p. 25-27.

(m) Londini, apud Franciscum Tytonium Menfis Martii 22 . |Anno 1648.

(n) Preface to the 19th vol. of the Parliamen-

(e) Wood, vol. ii. €. 648.

(p) Plato Redivivus, P. 173. Izmo. ad edit.

ever !

Lond. 1681.

advanced, and the people of this land enjoy the bleffings of peace, freedom and justice, to them and their optiterities (1). This declaration, at the fame time, was printed, by order of parliament, in Latin, under the title of 'Parliamenti Angliæ Declaratio: in quâ Res-Nuperum Gestæ, et Decretum de Statu Angliæ Regio in liberam Rempublicam vertendo, asseruntur (m). The great and remarkable transactions of the commonwealth were published by their order, and translated into Latin, for the information of other countries, as appears from a great many papers yet remaining in the hands of the curious and inquifitive: and a very accurate journal in French was published by authority of the council of state, for the like use of foreigners, intituled, 'Nouvelles Ordinaires de Londres,' beginning July 1650, and ending January 1660-1 (n). Nor mult it be forgotten, that, for the use of their own subjects, tary History. a journal of a like nature, intitled, " Mercurius Politicus, comprising the sum of foreign intelligence, with the affairs now on foot in the three nations of England, Scotland and Ireland,' was, by the same authority, printed likewise. It commences June 9, 1649, and ends in April, 1660 (2). These publications shewed great fense of propriety, honour and fair intentions in the parliament, and render it very furprising, that no compleat history of those times should be given us by any contemporary writer. Mr. Neville speaks of 'one of those who were in employment from the year 40 to 60, who had written a history of those 20 years, with great truth and impartiality (p).'---What is > (KK) The deeds in Ireland under the command of Crom-Ireland had given the parliament great cause of resentment. Besides the barbarous massacre in 1641, which become of it is not known-Probably it is loft for nant-general, and the subsequent settlement

which loudly called for vengeance, and which the best partiof the English nation were defirous of feeing inflicted, it had shewed a particular spite and malice against the parliament! Charles cherished this disposition, and, by a variety of methods, endeavoured to make it declare in his favour, and support his cause of Some success, 'tiswell known, he had, more, probably, he wouldhave had, but for the extream bigottry of the priefts, and the Nuntio, who were hardly to be fatisfied by any concessions. At length, however, a peace was made between the Marquis of Ormonde, lord-lieutenant-general; and general governor of the kingdom of Ireland, on behalf of King Charles of the one part, and the general affembly of the Roman Catholics of the-faid kingdom; for, and on behalf of his Majesty's Roman catholic fubjects, on the other part. This peace was proclaimed January 17, 1648, and does very little honour to the Marquis or his mafter. For, among other things, it was agreed, . That all acts, ordinances and orders made by both or either houses of parliament, to the blemish, dishonour and prejudice of the Roman Catho-' lies of that kingdom, fince the 7th of August, 1641, · should be vacated; that all inditements, attainders, outlawries in that kingdom, and all the processes and other: proceedings, fince the faid time, in prejudice of the Catholics, should be made void; that Catholics ' might fit and vote in parliament; have places of ho-"mour, command, profit and trust in the army, and that an act of oblivion should be passed to extend to. all his Majesty's subjects of that kingdom, nofiall treasons and offences of what nature, kind or quality "foever, fince the 23d of October, 1641.' In a word, every thing the Catholics could almost wish for was granted them, to the no finall aftonishment of the protestants. This past not without observation in England. However, by means of this peace, the chief parts of Ireland declared for Charles, and afterwards for his fon;

ton's profe

works,

vol. i. p.

there in pursuance of the act of parliament

and lord Ormande, emboldened thereby, took the liberty to use a language towards the English government, which he little imagined they would fo foon avenge. The dregs and scum of the house of commons, picked and awed by the army, 'a wicked remnant, left for no other end, than yet further, if it be possible, (7) See the articles of to delude the people with the name of a parliament, peace, letter, were some of the expressions his lordship made use of &c. in Milin his letter to colonel Jones, governor of Dublin, in order to induce him to furrender that city into his hands. Cromwell was also likened in the same letter to John of 364-385. Leyden (q).

> Milton, in his observations on this peace, gives his lordship very keen answers to these reproaches, though in a stile far more decent. 'Seeing, says he, he cone tains not himself, but, contrary to what a gentleman flould know of civility, proceeds to the contemptuous naming of a person, whose valour and high me-' rit many enemies, more noble than himself, have both honoured and feared; to affert his good name and reputation, of whose service the commonwealth · receives fo ample satisfaction, it is answered in his behalf, that Cremwell, whom he couples with a name of fcorn, hath done, in a few years, more eminent and remarkable deeds, whereon to found nobility in his house, though it were wanting, than Ormonde, and all his ancestors put together, can shew from any record of their Irish exploits, the widelt scene of their ' glory (r).' This the Marquis got by using abusive language. - But to proceed with the narration. Peace being made with the catholics, and Lord Inchiqueen having joined also with Ormonde, the Marquis advised his young master Charles II. to come thither as to a place of fecurity and advantage. In a memorial delivered by the lords of his Majesty's council to the lords deputies for the States General, March 29, 1649, N.S. we find them, after touching on the state of England

(r) Id. p. 393.

for that purpose, whereby the Irish being suband Scotland, declaring his Majesty's resolutions in the following manner: 'This being the true condition of his Majesty's two kingdoms of England and Scotland, and it being necessary for his Majesty to give life to the afflicted state of his affairs by his own activity and vigour, your lordships clearly discern, that his other ' kingdom of Ireland is, for the present, fittest to receive his Majesty's person; and thither he intends, with all convenient speed, to transport himself, being thereunto earnestly advised, and with great importuinity invited, by the kingdom of Ireland, and by the " Marquis of Ormonde, his Majesty's lieutenant-general there; by whose great wisdom a peace is there concluded, and thereby the King, at this time, possessed entirely of three parts of four of that his large and fruitful kingdom, and of the command of good ar-' mies and a good fleet to be joined to his navy; and he hath reason to believe that Dublin, and the few ' other places (that have submitted to the rebellious ' power in England) either are, upon the knowledge of that odious parricide, returned to their allegiance, or will be suddenly reduced; so that the affairs of that kingdom being fettled (which we hope will be in a (s) Or-6 (fhort time) the King will be ready to go from thence monde's into Scotland, when his presence there shall be required. into Scotland, when his presence there shall be requi- by Carte, fite (s).' How full the King was of going to Ireland, vol. i. p. appears from the following letter, written in cypher by 262. Lond. Sir Edward Nicholas, from the Hague (the day after 1739. 8vo. the above memorial was given in) to Lord Ormonde. ' It is very true, that the King intends to make France ' his way to Ireland, and to meet the Queen: and, I believe, he will go to Paris to her. The truth is, I cannot guess at the time of our remove, the' the King be resolved for Ireland, and desires to be there as foon as may be: and no man is now fo mad, as openly to avow a diflike of it. But the want of money is so incredible, and the debts so great, that fubdued, the best part of that kingdom

was cou-

I know not how we shall get over these difficulties.

And you must know; that, though no man opposes

the going into Ireland, yet many are in their hearts against it, and are glad to cherish any rubs. The Scotch faction is strong and bold, and have friends in this state. The Queen, I believe, will govern very much, and is full of defigns. They perswade her to State papers, 'go with the King into Ireland (t).'-But all these &c. p. 250. deligns proved abortive: for the parliament, understanding what had passed in Ireland, appointed lieutenantgeneral Cramwell commander in chief of that kingdom. He had Ireton placed next in command under him, and great preparations were made for the war. In the mean time the spirit, conjured up by Cromwell in the Levellers, began to be very troublesome to the state, and incommodious to its affairs. They reproached those in power; they refused obedience to the general; and would not go into Ireland. Fairfax and Cremwell fet themselves to reduce those men, and they did it so effectually, that the service of Ireland, was no farther hindered. Whilst Cromwell was making preparations for his voyage, lord Ormonde besieged Dublin; but Jones found soon an opportunity to give him a specimen of the valour of the English. For, with a very few forces, comparatively, he fell on the besiegers, killed 4000, took 2517 prisoners, together with a great quantity of arms and stores. Ormande soon after writ to Jones for a lift of the prifoners taken, to whom Jones laconically replied, 'My (a) Borlafe's ' lord, fince I routed your army, I cannot have the History of the execrable Irish rebellion, p. 222. Fol. Lond. 1680.

(1) Ormonde's

happiness to know where you are, that I may wait " upon you (u).'--- Cromwell arrived at Dublin on the 15th of August, 1649, and on the 30th of the same month took the field, besieged Drogheda, took it by florm, and put the garrison to the sword. All this was done in the space of nine days, and a body of near 1 3000 men, fays Borlaje, were totally destroyed and · massacred, with which, in respect of experience and was portioned out among the foldiers and ad-

courage of the officers, and goodness and fidelity of the common men, the marquis would have been glad 6 to have found himself engaged in the field with the (x) Borlase's enemy; though upon some disadvantages (x).' The History, &c. flaughter used at Drogheda has been looked on by the P. 224. generality as very cruel and barbarous, and Cromwell has been reproached greatly on that account. And it must be consessed, that orders issued for putting to the fword, and giving no quarter, found very shocking in the ears of the humane and benevolent. And it were to have been wished that such orders had never been given or executed by any general of rank and character. Though, if ever fuch treatment is justifiable, it is in fuch a case as this, where the known disposition and behaviour of the sufferers are remarkably barbarous, inhuman and cruel. Cromwell, in his letter to the speaker, dated Dublin, September 17, 1649, owns that he forbade to spare any that were in arms in the town, and ' he thinks,' he fays, 'that they put to the fword about 2000 men the first night they entered; that the ' next day one of the towers which had held out having submitted, their officers were knocked on the head, and every tenth man of the foldiers killed, and the rest shipped for the Barbadoes.—I am perswaded,' adds he, 'that this is a righteous judgment of God ' upon these barbarous wretches, who have imbrued their hands in fo much innocent blood, and that it will tend to prevent the effusion of blood for the future; which are the satisfactory grounds to such actions, which, otherwise, cannot but work remorfe mentary and regret (y).' This is faying the most for the justi- History, vol. fication of the fact. The name of Cromwell, and the xix. p. 204. execution at Drogheda, had fuch an effect indeed, that fuccess almost constantly attended him; insomuch that the far greater part of Ireland was reduced to the obedience of the commonwealth, before he returned to England, which was in May, 1650. After this Q 3

adventurers of the English nation: witness the

the war was carried on hy Ireton, whom Cromwell had constituted his deputy, with like valour and success, till, in a little time, the great armies of the Catholics were dispersed, their towns taken, their leaders forced to fly, and the whole kingdom, in a manner, subdued. Application was made for affiftance from abroad, particularly to the Duke of Lerrain, who promised great things upon conditions very high; but little was done by him, or any one else: for the English arms were every where terrible, and he thought himself most out of danger who kept himself most out of their reach. In a word, after some time the Irish being wholly reduced, their lands were divided among the foldiers and adventurers, the murtherers of the English were exemplarily punished, and peace and tranquillity were given to a land ruined by the villany and barbarity of its inhabitants. How fully Ireland was reduced by the commonwealth and Cromwell, will appear from the following extracts from Clarendon .- When the success of ' the parliament had totally subdued the King's arms, and himself was so inhumanly murdered, neither the forces in Ireland, under the King's authority, nor the ' Irish, who had too late promised to submit to it, could ' make any long relistance; so that Cromuell quickly ' dispersed them by his own expedition thither; and, by licenfing as many as defired it to transport as ma-'ny from thence, for the service of the two crowns of France and Spain, as they would contract for, ' quickly made a disappearance of any army in that kingdom to oppose his conquests. And after the defeat of the King at Worcester, he seemed to all men to be in as quiet a possession of Ireland as of England, and to be as much without enemies in the one as the other kingdom. Not only all the Irish nation (very few excepted) were found guilty of the rebel-'lion, and fo to have forfeited all their estates; but the Marquis of Ormonde, the Lord Inchiquin, and all * the English Catholics, and whosoever had served the King, were declared to be under the same guilt, and the lands feized upon for the benefit of the state. The whole kingdom was admeasured; the accounts of the money paid by the adventurers within the time limited, and what was due to the army for their pay, were stated; and such proportions of acres in the several for provinces were affigned to the adventurers and officers and foldiers, as were agreeable to the act of parliament, by admeasurement.—And that every body ' might with the more fecurity enjoy that which was affigned to him, they had found a way to have the consent of many to their own undoing. They found the utter extirpation of the nation (which they had 6 intended) to be in itself very difficult, and to carry in it somewhat of horror, that made some impression upon the stone-hardness of their own hearts. They therefore found this expedient, which they called an act of grace. There was a large tract of I land, even to the half of the province of Conaught, that was separated from the rest by a long and large river, and which, by the plague and many maffacres, remained almost desolate. Into this space and circuit of land they required all the Irish to retire by such a f day under the penalty of death; and all who should ' after that time be found in any other part of the kingdom, man, woman, or child, should be killed by any body that met them. The land within this circuit, the most barren in the kingdom, was, out of the grace and mercy of the conquerors, affigned to those of the nation, who were enclosed in such prooportions as might, with great industry, preserve their lives. And to those persons, from whom they had taken great quantities of land in other provinces, they ' affigned the greater proportions within this precinct; fo that it fell to some men's lot, especially when they were accommodated with houses, to have a competent livelihood, though never to the fifth part of what had been taken from them in a much better province. And, that they might not be exalted with this merciful donative, it was a condition that accompanied Q 4

this their accommodation, that they should all give ree leafes of their former rights and titles to the land that was taken from them, in confideration of what was now affigned to them; and fo they should for. ever bar themselves and their heirs from ever laying claim to their old inheritance. --- And, by this means, the plantation (as they called it) of Conaughi was fie nished, and all the Irish nation inclosed within that circuit, the rest of Ireland being lest to the English; "fome to the old lords and just proprietors, who, being s all protestants (for no Roman Catholic was admitted) had either never offended them, or had ferved them, or had made composition for their delinquencies, by the benefit of some articles; and some to the adventurers and foldiers. And a good and great part (as · I remember, the whole province of Tipperary) Cromwe'l had referved to himself, as a demesne (as he cal-· led it) for the flate, and in which no adventurer or ' foldier should demand his let to be assigned, and, no doubt, intended both the flate and it for the making great his own family. It cannot be imagined in how easy a method, and with what peaceable formality, this whole great kingdom was taken from the just · lords and proprietors, and divided and given among those, who had no other right to it, but that they had power to keep it, no men having fo great shares as they who had been instruments to murder the King, and were not like, willingly, to part with it to his fuccessor. Ireland was the great capital, out of which all debts were paid, all fervices rewarded, and ' all acls of bounty performed. And, which is more wonderful, all this was done and fettled, within little " more than two years, to that degree of perfection, that there were many buildings raifed for beauty as well as use, orderly and regular plantations of trees, and fences and enclosures raised throughout the kingdom, purchases made by one from the other at very · valuable rates, and jointures made upon marriages, s and all other conveyances and fettlements executed, as in a kingdom of peace within itself, and where no doubt could be made of the validity of titles (z). (z) Conti-The reader need not be told how much honour this nuation of Clarendon's relation does to the parliament of the commonwealth Life, vol.ii. of England, by whose wisdom these great things were p. 114thus fettled and accomplished. His lordship strongly 118. indeed infinuates cruelty in these proceedings: but his word is not to be depended on. That they intended the utter extirpation of the Irish nation is meer calumny, as appears from the preamble to the act for fettling Ireland, in which, among other reasons for pasfing it, one is, 'That the people of that nation might know that it is not the intention of the parliament to extirpate that whole nation, but that mercy and pardon, both as to life and estate, may be extended to all husbandmen, plowmen, labourers, artificers, and (a) Scobel's others of the inferior fort (a).' The curious reader collections, will do well to consult the act. I will not dilate on his c. 13. lordship's stiling Tipperary a province; such a mistake is pardonable in a man who confesses himself to have been ignorant of there being any such place in England as (b) Conti-Sheer ness (b).—However, I cannot find that Cremwell nuation, vol. reserved it as a demesne for the state or his own family. iii. p. 752. - I will only add, that Lord Molesworth gives it as his opinion, that to Cremwell's distributing of (c) Preface the enemies lands to the foldiers in Ireland, we owe to Hollo-' that kingdom's being a protestant kingdom at this man's Franthat kingdom's being a protestant kingdom at the co Gallia, day, and its continuing subject to the crown of Eng. co Gallia, 2d edit. p. · land (c).

Lieutenant-general Ludlow had a great share in all these transactions.—The spirit with which he acted will appear from the following answer given to a letter of the Marquis of Clanrickarde, desiring a conference with him for the fettling the repose of the nation, and a fafe conduct for commissioners to treat with him for that purpofe.

the actions of Cromwell (LL) in Scotland, which,

My Lord,

IN answer to yours of the 24th of March, by which you propose a treaty for the settlement of this country, and desire a safe conduct for the commissioners you shall judge fit to employ in the management of that affair, I think fit, in pursuance of the advice of the commissioners of the parliament of England, and of many officers of the English army, to advertise you, as hath been already answered to those who have fent propositions of the like nature, that the settlement of this nation doth of right belong to the parliament of the commonwealth of England, to whom we are obliged in duty to leave it, being affured that they will not capitulate with those who ought to submit to them, and yet oppose themselves to their authority, and upon vain and frivolous hopes have refused such offers of favour as they would gladly accept at prefent: so that I fear they will be confirmed to proceed against them with the highest severity, which that you may prevent by your timely submission, is the desire of,

My Lord,

(d) Ludlow, vol. i. p. 398. Your humble fervant, EDMUND LUDLOW (d).

This reduction of Ireland, in so short a time, when the affairs of the commonwealth were in so low a state there, does, undoubtedly, great honour to Cromwell, as well as the other commanders in chief after him. His actions here have always justly made one part of his panegyric. We shall soon see that he did not disgrace them by any after military ill behaviour.

of Worcester.] 'Tis well known, that the Steets were extremely ill used by Charles the first; that they opposed his measures; marched an army into England; joined with the parliament, and helped to reduce him to a

frate

which, with the victory at Worcester, so to-flute of captivity. They stopped short, however, here, and very violently opposed his trial and condemnation, looking on him as their King, and the judges as murtherers. Thus matters stood when the commonwealth was erected in England. Soon after application was made to Charles II. by commissioners from the Scottish nation, in order to his entrance into that kingdom, and mounting the throne of his ancestors. Many of the young King's coun'ellors were against this, looking on the Scots as a rebellious nation who. had been the original cause of the late King's missortunes. And very probable it is, that had not Lord Ormonde, and the catholic confederates in Ireland, been defeated by Jones and Cromwell, he would not have had a thought of going thither. Lord Byron, in a letter to the Marquis of Ormende, dated Hague, April 12, 1649, N. S. writes as follows: 'Commissioners are come out of Scotland, confishing of one Earl (the Earl of Caf-(sels) two burgesses, and four divines, to treat with his Majesty concerning the affairs of that kingdom, or rather to impose unsufferable conditions upon him. ' To give the better affurance of their good intentions to his fervice, immediately before their coming out of Scotland, the Marquis of Huntley was put to death for no other crime but his loyalty to the King. Their or propositions are as insolent as can be imagined; for ' they require that all malignants and evil counsellors ' (and particularly the Marquis of Montrose) should be banished the court; that his Majesty should take both the national covenant and the holy league and covenant (as they term it) and establish a presbyterian government in all his kingdoms. But the King be-'ing now unfortunately in a presbyterian country, ' cannot resent these indignities so as otherwise he would. Howsoever, his intention is, not to enter into any particular debate of these propositions, but to remit the commissioners till his coming into Iretally broke the power of Scotland, that it was land, the matters propounded by them concerning his

(e) Ormonde's State papers, vol. i. p. 268.

other kingdoms as well as Scatland (e).'-Sir Edward Nicholas, in a letter to the fame nobleman, dated Fersey, October 13-23, 1649, fays, 'There are Scots commissioners coming hither; but their propositions are as unreasonable as the former sent into Holland. They have now a strong faction about the King: and the Lord Jermyn (who is esteemed the head of the Scots presbyterian faction) hath, its faid, gained many that are now about his Majesty to his party, s and, fome fay, will come hither to affift with all his interest and power the advancement of the King's defigns. The truth is, Sir Edward Hyde being fo une necessarily and unskilfully employed in Spain, hath. given an infinite advantage to the Scots presbyterians; for he was expert in all their jigs and artifices (f). What the good fecretary would have had the young King do is hard to fay. There was no place for him in England or Ireland where then could he go but into Scotland? How expert foever Sir Edward Hyde might be in the Scots jigs and artifices, it would not have been in his power to have hindered the King's resolving to agree with the commissioners of that kingdom, though, 'tis very certain, his inclination was not much that way. For he had no love for the Scots league and covenant; he relished not the manners and behaviour of the ruling part of that nation; nor could he well put on the stiff and formal air which was almost essentially necessary to gain their favour. But necessity has no law: the King leaving Breda took ship in Holland; landed in Scotland; and, having taken the folemn league and covenant, and figned a declaration, wherein he renounced the fins of his father's house, and of his own, and the idolatry of his mother, was folemnly crowned there. This filled the royalists with hopes, as appears from a letter of Lord Ormande to Sir Edward Nichelas, dated Louvre,

(f) Id. p. 322.

was no longer in a condition to support its own

February 12, 1650. 'Though it be very true, that his Majesty's condition must be to himself most irksome, and to his fervants, that have endeavoured to ferve his happy father and himfelf in their own method, most uncomfortable, yet, by what Mr. Seymour relates, and which feems confirmed by the London prints, it may be truly faid to be in some degree amended by his coronation, and the conjunction of that people, which, s as it gives some foreign reputation to his business, so ' it promifes more of relistance against the rebels, than when they were divided; and, confequently, may 6 more probably afford an opportunity to others of better inclinations to show themselves; and the same 6 God, who, contrary to, and beyond the original intention of the English rebels, hath permitted them to ' perpetrate so unexampled villanies against the royal family and freedom of England, may, contrary to, ' and beyond the purpose of the Scots (who gave the s rife to the perpetration) make them instrumental in the restoration, I hope he purposes, to the King's just (g) Orthe rettoration, I nope ne purpoies, to the King's juit wo monde's power, and his people's free claim (g).' But his lord-State paship's hopes were ill founded. The Scots were zealous pers, vol. i. indeed to ferve their covenanted King, and they hated P. 405. heartily the English government and army, whom they were taught by their clergy to look on and call fectaries, a name, in the ears of the priests and priest-ridden, most odious and abominable. Great preparations were every where made to raise an army, which might destroy these men, and restore his Majesty to the English throne. But the thing was not so easily effected as planned. Those who sat at the helm of affairs were upon their guard. On the 12th of June, 1650, the parliament voted, that the lord-general Fairfax, and lieutenant-general Cromwell, should both be commanded to go upon the northern expedition: and that the council of state (which had been constituted at the beginning of the new government, and confifted of fome

own independency, much less place the fon

of the most able men in it) do acquaint them with it, and take care for their speedy march towards Scotland. For they thought it best to be before hand with the Scots, and to carry the war into that country. · Fairfax being advised with herein, seemed at first to 6 like well of it, but afterwards being hourly perswaded by the prefbyterian ministers, and his own lady, who was a great patroness of them, he declared himfelf unfatisfied that there was a just ground for the e parliament of England to fend their army to invade Scotland: but that in case the Scots should invade Eng-' land, then he was forward to engage against them in defence of his own country. The council of flate fomewhat troubled at his excellency's scruples, appointed Cromwell; Lambert, Harrison, St. John, and Whitbek, to be a committee to confer hereupon with him; and to endeavour to fatisfy him of the justice and lawfulness of this undertaking. Accordingly this com-' mittee met Lord Fairfax, and being shut up together in a room in Whitehall, they went first to prayer, that God would direct them in this bufiness; and Cromwell began. Most of the committee also prayed, after which they discoursed in the manner related at large by Mr. Whitlock.' From his account it appears that Fairfax grounded his unwillingness to invade Scotland, on the foundation of the two nations being bound in the national league and covenant; ' And now for us, faid he, contrary thereunto and without fufficient cause given us by them, to enter into their country with an army, and to make war upon them, is that which I cannot see the justice of, nor how we shall be able to justify the lawfulness of it to God or man.' Cremwell to this replied: 'I confess, my lord, that if they have given us no cause to invade them, it will not be s justifiable in us to do it; and to make war upon them without a fufficient ground for it, will be contrary to that which in conscience we ought to do, and displeas-

OLIVER CROMWELL.

of the late King on the throne of his fa-

s ing both to God and good men. But, my lord, if they have invaded us, as your lordship knows they have done, fince the national covenant, and contrary 6 to it, in that action of the Duke of Hamilton, which was by order and authority from the parliament of that kingdom, and so the act of the whole nation by their representatives: and if they now give us too much cause of suspicion that they intend another invasion upon us, joining with their King, with whom they have made a full agreement, without the affent or privity of this commonwealth, and are very bufy at this e present in raising forces and money to carry on their ' defign: if these things are not a suffic ent ground and cause for us to endeavour to provide for the safety of our own country, and to prevent the miseries which an invasion of the Scots would bring upon us, I humbly submit it to your excellencies judgment. That they have formerly invaded us, and brought a war into the bowels of our country, is known to all, wherein God was pleafed to blefs us with success against them; and that they now intend a new invasion upon us, I ' do as really believe, and have as good intelligence of, ' as we can of any thing not yet acted. Therefore I fay, my lord, that, upon these grounds, I think we have a most just cause to begin, or rather to return and requite their hostility first begun upon us; and ' thereby to free our country (if God shall be pleased to affift us, and I doubt not but he will) from the great mifery and calamity of having an army of Scots within our country. That there will be a war between us, I fear is unavoidable. Your excellency will foon deter-' mine whether it be better to have this war in the bowels of another country or our own; and that it • will be in one of them, I think it is without scruple.'-This feems all very forcible, but it had no effect on Fairfax, who having before taken his resolution, as it should feem, contented himself with saying to this and thers, which the Scots had fondly hoped for.

the like kind of argument urged by Whitlock, St. John, and Harrison, 'That human probabilities are not sufficient grounds to make war upon a neighbour nation, especially our brethren of Scotland, to whom we are engaged in a folemn league and covenant (b).' One must have had a strange understanding, or been under a very strange influence to have talked after this rate! But so it was, Fairfax chose rather to resign his commission than go against the Scots, in order to prevent their intended visit into his own country. Cramwell urged him to continue it with great vehemence, but in vain, and being fure that he was immoveably fixed in his determination, preffed him, and the parliament to continue him, with all that dexterity and diffimulation I have else-where mentioned. - Cromwell now, by an ordinance of parliament, succeeded Fairfax in the supreme command, and the parliament published a declaration upon the marching of their army into Scotland. In this declaration they take notice of the averleness to amity and friendship to the commonwealth manifested by the Scots, and their hoffile disposition, notwithstanding the fignal hand of God against them upon their late invafion. After this they mention their transactions in 1648, and the kindnesses which they had received from the English army when in Scotland, 'yet now,' continues the parliament, 'laying aside all consideration of former kindnesses, and of their expressions and engagements of ' justice and treaties, the common bonds of human fociety, they endeavour to exercise their power for the destruction of those by whose means they did receive it;

(b) Memorials; p. 46c—162.

• upon destruction of those by whose means they did receive it;

 they again insist upon the same pretensions to matters

of our government, and take upon them to determine what is fundamental here; and direct and threaten us,

if we change not what is now established, and form

it to their mind, or accommodate it to their interest.—

to their mind, or accommodate it to their interest.—
Their design and resolution again to invade England, will be the more evident, if we remember, 1. That for. Indeed after this last defeat, Scotland was upon occasion of demanding only a treaty for fatiffaction for their former invasion, they do, in express terms, declare themselves enemies to the government of this commonwealth, and all that adhere thereto, and lay foundations of fedition, and new infurrections amongst ourselves. 2. In pursuance of these grounds, they who cannot claim to themselves the least colour of authority or dominion over us, yet have taken upon them, in Scotland, to proclaim Charles Stuart to be King of England and Ireland; and in their treaty fince with him, have promifed him, their affistance against this nation. 2. Before the late invasion from Scotland, the parliament of England, upon forelight of their disposition to what followed, and seeing their prepa-' ration, and the party they had feduced in order thereunto, believing what the event was like to be, fent 6 thither commissioners to treat for preventing the ef-' fusion of blood; but the treaty was refused, and an-' fwered only with the immediate march of their army into England. Having therefore again refused the ' amicable offer of a treaty for peace, we have reason to expect another invation. 4. They have equally declared against us as sectaries, as they have against ' those of Montrose's party, putting us into the same rank with malignants and papifts. Their ' defign and purpose being thus evident, a necessity ' is upon us to use our best endeavours, with God's affistance, to prevent them, and not leave them to invade us at their chosen opportunity, and our greatest dis-' advantage, when they shall have compleated their defign with foreign states for their aid, and with their faction and party in this nation for correspondence and concurrence in their attempts upon us; and that we ' may not be at the insupportable charge of keeping feveral armies in our own bowels, and subject ourselves ' to the contributions, plunderings, and barbarous usage of a Scots army, if we fuffer them again to enter;

was by the arms of the English commonwealth or of keeping one formed army constantly upon the borders, for preventing or relifting those attempts upon us, which they are waiting an opportunity at their best advantage to make. A burthen from which we ought to apply our best endeavours to free the people, who have suffered so deeply already by their means; which hath been part of their defign, hereby to bring the people to a discontent with the government from ' the sense of charge, without considering the cause of the continuance thereof, that fo they may be fitted to receive their impressions, and carry on their faction among us, and keep it ready for them to make use of when they shall see cause (i).'-On the 29th of June, Cromwell fet forward from London towards the north, and by the approbation of the parliament, a declaration , of the army of England, upon their march into Scotland, was printed. The title of it, too remarkable to be omitted, runs thus: To all that are faints, and partakers of the faith of God's elect, in Scotland *. There is a cant here and there interspersed, but on the whole it is far from a contemptible performance. In it is given their reasons for bringing the late King to justice, and excluding his family from the throne; as also for abolishing the house of lords, and erecting a commonwealth. After which, the breach of the covenant; the rejection of wealth almost wholly subdued; and those who presbyterian government; and the heresies and blasphemies charged on them by some statists, as they style them, are refuted: and the King and his adherents are represented as influenced by popish counsels. They then add, ' Is there not now just cause for all good men with you to fear that one fo bred, so engaged and interested, and meerly in fuch a way coming in to you, doth but watch his opportunity (to speak nothing of the weight of blood of the faints under the altar, crying fill for vengeance upon him and that family) till by his influence upon your army, which you know how composed, he may gain his ends upon you; and how likewise the generality of the people of Scotland are asfected, is not unworthy of your most serious conside- (k) Parliaration, nor of a friendly intimation from us (k)'--- mentary Cromwell also, at his arrival in Berwick, published ano- xix. p. 3-6. ther declaration to the people of Scotland, in which referring to the grounds of the army's marching thither as fet forth by the parliament in their declaration abovementioned, he takes notice of the unjust reproaches and false slanders cast on the army under his command; and in order to refute them, appeals to his known conduct, when in their country two years before, towards the people in general, and the best affected in particular. He then goes on to assure the gentry and commonalty of Scotland, 'That he will not offer the least violence or 6 injury to their persons, goods or possessions, they be-' ing innocent in his opinion, and invites them to flay and abide in their own habitations, where, fays he, they may and shall enjoy what they have in peace; and not to fuffer themselves to be mislead by the crast and fubtilty of any, into that which must needs prove their inevitable loss and ruin, and a great hazard to ' their country (1).'

* It is not improbable this declaration of the army of England, upon their march into Scotland, was intended to obviate the prejudices excited against them in 'The declaration of major-general Missey and 80 other English officers and commanders ingaged with the kingdom of Scotland, in behalf of their presbyterian brethren, in England, Ireland, and the principalitie of Wales. Declaring the grounds and reasons moving them to take up arms in the kingdom of Scotland; admonishing all conscientious presbyterians not to appstatize from their first principles, nor adhere, engage, or take up arms with the rebels at Westminster. Dated at Orkney island, March 29, 1650. In quarto, without printer's name, or place. The title of this piece alone might satisfy us of the spirit with which it is written; which indeed is starp, irritating, and abusive, and full of the blackest characters of the army and the parliament.

(1)Id. p gff. But these were things of little consequence in comparison of the after actions of Cromwell and his army.

For they made it appear to Scotland and the world, that R-2 their who had bid defiance to their own princes, were their discipline and valour were unparalleled. The country people were treated with great kindness by the general; their wants supplied; and such as in the least injured them, very severely punished. On the 22d day of July, 1650, Cromwell entered Scotland, and endeavoured by a variety of ways to bring the Scots to a battle. But they, though there were some smart skirmishes, kept themselves from a general engagement, and thought by that means to occasion the English, as the winter approached, to return through want of provisions. They probably judged rightly; and had they kept their resolution, Cromwell might have had the mortification of finding himself unable to execute his designs. But prudence or fortune failed them, Cromwell began to find himself, in such difficulties that he thought it proper to retreat towards Dunbar; the Scots followed him close, with an army greatly superiour. They now thought they had Cromwell in their power, and they were determined not to let him escape. -- What condition the English were in, what the hopes of the Scats, and at the same time the high enthusiasm of Cromwell, will best appear from his own letter to Mr. Speaker Lenthall, dated Dunbar, Sept. 4, 1650. Speaking of his retreat towards Dunbar, he adds, 'Their [the Scots] whole army was in march after us: and indeed our drawing back in this manner, with the addition of three new regiments added to them, did much heighten their confidence, if not prefumption and arrogancy. The enemy that night we perceived gathered towards the hills, labouring to make a perfect interpolition between ' us and Berwick; and having in this posture a great advantage, through his better knowledge of the country, which he effected by fending a confiderable party to the strait pass at Coppersputh, where ten men to hinder are better than forty to make their way. And truly this was an exigent to us, whereby the enemy reproached us with that condition the carliament's arwere forced to submit to a foreign (but not a griev-

my was in when it made its hard conditions with the King in Cornwall. By some reports that have come to us, they had disposed of us and of their business, in fufficient revenge and wrath towards our persons, and ' had swallowed up the poor interest of England, believing that their army and their King would have marched to London without any interruption; it being told us, we know not how truly, by a prisoner we took the ' night before the fight, that their King was very fuddenly to come amongst them, with those English they ' allowed to be about him; but in what they were thus listed up, the Lord was above them. The enemy lying in the posture before mentioned, having those ' advantages, we lay very near him, being sensible of our disadvantages, having some weakness of flesh, but e yet consolation and support from the Lord himself, to our poor weak faith, wherein I believe not a few amongst us shared, that because of their numbers, because of their advantages, because of their confidence, because of our weakness, because of our strait, we were in the mount, and in the mount the Lord would be feen, and that he would find out a way of delivee rance and falvation for us; and indeed we had our (m) Parliaconfolations and our hopes (m). Nor were their mentary hopes vain. On the third of September, Cromwell, with xix. p. 344. an army of about 7500 foot, and 3500 horse, attacked the See Appen-Scotch army, confisting, as 'twas faid, of 6000 horse, and dix. 16,000 foot at least, and in less than an hour put the whole army into confusion, totally routed them, and had the chase and execution of them near eight miles. In this battle the Scots had 3000 killed, 10000 made prisoners, exclusive of officers, all their baggage and train taken, with 200 colours. This victory, fo unexpected in Scotland and England, filled the friends of the commonwealth and Cromwell with great joy. prayers are heard,' faid Mr. Sympson in a letter to the Lord General, dated Sept. 10, 1650, 6 our trust on grievous) yoke. For 'tis well known that the

him answered, his promise accomplished to judge our ' cause in the day of battle, when he might have judged our persons according to our fins .-- Our enemies here (the morning of that day before these tidings came) run up and down to their friends with news, that you were coming back with shame; they insulted in their shops and street, because that was now come to pass they always looked for, &c. But whilst their hearts were thus merry in them, their faces grew pale, (n) Milton's e their countenances cast down, because the sword of the Lord and of his fervants had prevailed (n).'-Oliver St. John also, writing on the same occasion to the general, observes, 'That God had determined the difpute between England and Scotland, in such a manner as all may fee and acknowledge that he hath done it; and therefore you could not fight when and as you defired; but then when your forces were lessened in umber, and the remainder weakned by fickness and wants, and thereby much dispirited; and when the enemy thence and by their recruits, became confident, relying upon and boafting in the arm of flesh. This feason did the Lord chuse to give his judgment ' in, and fignal was it, for fithence these wars, never was there, as I remember, so great a victory obtained with so little loss of ours (a). Such a victory, indeed, in fuch circumstances, may excuse a little enthusiasm, in minds less disposed to it than Cromwell and his friends! No doubt this appearance of providence, and these congratulations received, must have been highly p'easing to the lord general. The parliament, fensible of Cromevell's merit in this affair, on receiving the account, paid him all the respect the most ambitious man, one would think, could wish for. They ordered 'men, money, provisions, medicaments, physicians, apothecaries, and all other necessaries for the army in Scotland; they set apart a day of thanksgiving; appointed that the colours then brought up, together with those taken from the State Papers, by Nickolls, p. 22.

(o) Id. p. 23.

the government there was far enough from being

Scots at Preston, to be set up in Westminster-hall; refolved that a letter should be written to the lord general from the parliament, taking notice of his eminent fervices, with the special acknowledgment and thanks of the house; and moreover referred it to the committee of the army, to consider what medals may be prepared both for officers and foldiers that were in this fervice in Scotland, and fet the proportions and values of them, (p) Journal, and their number, and prefent an estimate of them to Sep. 10, the house (p). Nor were these empty complements: 1650. the parliament were fully pleased with Cromwell, and desirous of gratifying him as much as might be. 'I ' never knew,' fays Sir H. Vane in a letter to the lord general; the day on which the above resolutions were taken, ' any thing take a deeper or more kindly ime pression on the parliament, who in general have good e aymes, and are capable of improvement upon such wonderful deliverances as these vouchsafed to them. Never were your friends to whom you directed ' your letter more enlarged in heart with thankfulness 6 to God, and in love to you and your army, than

from the fense of this late inexpressible deliverance (q). pers, by

Whether the officers and foldiers had the medals given Nickolls, them, proposed in the resolution of the house just mentioned, I know not. Certain 'tis, a very excellent medal was struck on the victory at Dunbar, on which is Cromwell's head in fine relief, and round it, The word at Dunbar the Lord of Hofts, Sept. 3, 1650. On the reverse is a representation of the parliament of the commonwealth of England. This was the work of the celebrated Mr. Symons, who had the patronage of Cromwell; and was recommended to the committee of the army, by him, for that purpose, in a letter which will be found in the Appendix.——But to return.—After the battle of Dunbar, all things gave way to the valour of the English general; Edinburgh, Leith, and many other places surrendered to him; and on the 24th of Dec. it was R A agreed,

being burthensome to the generality, though agreed, that the castle of Edinburgh, after a short, but brisk siege, should be delivered up to him, with all the ordinance, arms, magazines, and furniture of war thereunto belonging .-- 'It may feem strange and al-· most incredible, says a writer of that time, that such a ftrong and impregnable hold as was that, should be so easily won, the like whereof is not in that nation; wherefore it was the common vogue of that time, ' and by many credibly believed, that it was affaulted with filver engines (r).' It does not however appear that Cromwell was wont to make use of these against his foes .-- The Scots, in the mean while, were not intimidated by their losses: full of zeal for their King, and hatred of the fectaries, who were now their conquerors, they again railed a very confiderable army, and hoped without doubt to be fully avenged on them. For they had friends and well wishers in England, especially the presbyterians, who were plotting how to advance the young King to the thrones of his fathers. But all was ineffectual. The plots in England were discovered, and some lost their lives on that account; the Scots army cared not to face Cromwell, but chose what appeared to them, the fafer game, viz. to give him the flip, and march before him into England, where they counted they should meet with aid and affishance. This they put in execution. Charles II. at the head of a good army and gallant officers; attended by many of the chief nobility and gentry of Scotland, fet forward the nearest way for England. In Lancoshire he was joined by the Earl of Dirby with others, and after in vain fummoning Shrewsberry, he arrived at Worcester, where he determined to abide the coming of Cromwell, who was in full march after him. A few days brought him within view indeed; and on the third of Sept. 1651, he without ceremony, gave orders to his troops to attack the enemy, and gave them a total overthrow. 'This, 6 fays Cromwell, hath been a very glorious mercy, and

(r) Britannia Triumphalis, p. 67. 12mo. Lond, 1654. it could not be acceptable to those from whom as stiff a contest for sour or five hours, as ever I have (s) See his feen (s).' So that Clarendon, out of fpight to the Letter to the Speaker Scots, has grofly mifrepresented their behaviour in this in the Parbattle, by faying, 'That except on the part where Mid- liamentary dleton was, who was quickly overpowered, there was History, vol. * deten was, who was quickly overpowered, there was xx. p. 44. no refiftance made; but fuch a general confernation And Whitopossessed the whole army, that the rest of the horse lock, p. fled, and all the foot threw down their arms before 507, 508.

they were charged (1). What credit can fuch a p. 409. prejudiced writer deserve? Mr. Hume, however, has fervilely copied this false and ungenerous account of the (") History behaviour of his countrymen (u). In this battle the Britain, vol. King lost 3000 men, besides about 12000 made priso- ii. p. 29. ners, amongst whom were many of the chief quality. Thus an end for the present was put to the hopes of the Scots King and his party; who from this time was forced to wander abroad (where he would have wandered, had he had no affistance but from the cavaliers, for ever) till the reftoration in 1660. After this Scotland yielded to the English, and presumed no more to enter the lists, for power and dominion. Indeed she was wholly fubdued. How high a sense the parliament had of Cromwell's fervices, will appear from the instructions given to the commissioners whom they fent to compliment him on this last victory. They are dated Sept. 9, 1651, and are as follows: You are in the name of the par-6 liament, to congratulate his lordship's good recovery of health, after his dangerous fickness; and to take onotice of his unwearied labours and pains in the late expedition into Scotland, for the service of this com-6 monwealth; of his diligence in profecution of the enemy, when he fled into England; of the great hardships and hazards he hath exposed himself to, and e particularly at the late fight at Worcester; of the prudent and faithful managing and conducting throughout this great and important affair, which the Lord from 6 heaven hath fo fignally bleffed, and crowned with fo comwhom it had taken the power of tyrannifing over compleat and glorious an iffue. Of all which you are to make known to his lordship, the parliament hath thought fit, by you, to certify their good acceptance and great satisfaction therein: and for the fame you are to return, in the name of the parliament and commonwealth of England, their most hearty thanks: as also to the rest of the officers and soldiers, for their great and gallant services done to this ' commonwealth. You are likewise to let his lordsnip ' know that fince, by the great bleffing of God upon his 'lordship's and the army's endeavours, the enemy is so totally defeated, and the state of affairs, as well in England as in Scotland, such, as may very well dif-' pense with his lordship's continuance in the field; they do desire his lordship, for the better settlement of his health, to take fuch rest and repose as he shall find ' most requisite and conducing thereunto: and for that purpose to make his repair to, and residence at or within some few miles of this place, whereby also the parliament may have the affistance of his presence, in the great and important consultations for the further fettlement of this commonwealth, which they are tory, p. 48. ' now upon (x).' Mr. Whitlock, who was one of the voi. xx. And commissioners, tells us, 'That they met the general Journal, 9th Sept. 1651. ' near Aylesbury, delivered their message, and he rese ceived them with all kindness and respect: that he gave each of them a horse and two Scots prisoners, as a token of his thankful reception of the parliament's regard in fending them to meet and congratulate him (v).' Cromwell was also met at Acton, by the Speaker, the Lord President Bradsbaw, many members of parliament and the council of state, with the Lord Mayor, aldermen, and theriffs; and, entering London in a coach of flate, was received with all possible de-· monstrations of joy. And to crown all, the parliament resolved that lands of inheritance to the yearly value of (4000 !. belonging to the state, be fettled upon the lord genementaryH.f.

Tale, p. 509.

over their neighbours .- Nor was this all-general Cromwell and his heirs, as a mark of favour. from the parliament for his great and eminent services to (2) Parliathe commonwealth (2). The other officers were not tory, vol. xx. forgotten, but were provided for out of Scotland, which p. 50--52. being looked on in some measure as conquered, it was resolved to bring in an act for afferting the right of the commonwealth to fo much of Scotland, as was then under the forces of the commonwealth, and to fettle it under the government thereof (a).—Such being the (a) Journal, actions of Cromwell in Scotland, and at Worcester, we gth Sept. are not to wonder that his panegirists talked of them in lofty terms, and preferred him to antient heroes for valour and fortitude. The learned reader, possibly, may be pleased with a specimen of them: 'In victoriis tuis 6 tâm multis Olivari, quæ funt cò nobiliores, quò dif-6 ficiliores, periculofiores, formidabiliores pugnæ fuêre. 6 celeritatem certè tuam, fortitudinemquè superioribus heroibus emnibus longè clariorem arbitror, quippe quos vel explofi Sclopi globulus cum audaciá fuá proftravisset illicò. Atque ut ingenuè fatear, longè plus ' æstimo virtute tuâ superatam Cambriam, atque post fractos tàm multos, eosquè Scotorum valentissimos exercitus, à te captum Edenburgum, Sterlinumque, atque ex consequenti Scotiam universam. In Hibernia e verò Tredam vi captam, Hiberniamque redactam; ' in Anglia, Scotorum exercitu potentissimo defensam, " muntissimamquè tum natura loci, tum arte Vigorniam, vi tamen occupatam, plus inquam, ex animi mei ' finceritate victorias hasce tuas facio, quam Cyri, Alexandri, Julii Cæsaris laureas omnes, habita ratione (b) Paralletemporis, locorum, hostiumque (b).'—Another speaking nec non Oof him, faid, ' Ille est, ille est, auditores admiremini ! livarii, p. ' Cujus unius fortitudo plus biennio profecit, quam centenis seculis majores nostri profuerant, vel forsan 6 nepotes profuturi. Nempe per ultimam Thulen au-6 spiciis obstupescendis volitantia vexilla protulit, & ultra Romanas aquilas, exercituum victrices alas expli-

Disputes arising with the Dutch (MM), a fpirit.

(c) Oratio Aniverfaria in diem Inaugurationis Olivari, per Fisher. Fol. Lond. $655.

(d, Panegy-

ricus Crom-

4to. 1654.

cuit (c).' A third describes the battle of Worcester in the following manner: ' Ad extremum illud & maximum, in quo de summa rei Scoti dimicarunt; prælium venio. Illua inquam Vigornianum, omnibus totius antea actæ ætatis acerrimis comparandum: Nam neque apud Mantineam Thebani cum Lacedemoniis, e neque apud Zamam Annibal cum Scipione, neque in Pharfalicis campis Pompejus cum Ca fare, neque apud

' Mutinam cum Antonio Consules, neque apud Phi-' lippos cum Augusto & Antonio Brutus & Cassius acri-

'us & pertinaciùs dimicarunt (d).' The victory at welli, p. 35. Wercester, and the respect and applause almost univerfally attending him, inspired Cromwell, probably, first of all with the defire of dispossessing his masters, and seizing the supream command. The reasons of this

affertion will be found in the note (ww).

(MM) Disputes arising with the Dutch, a spirit and conduct appeared in the English commonwealth, &c.] From the beginning of the quarrel between Charles and the parliament, the Dutch had acted fomewhat partially in his Majesty's favour. Arms and ammunition, officers and private foldiers, together with fome thins, had been procured from them at different times by the Queen and her agents. On complaint of these things from the parliament, by their agent Mr. Strickland, orders were given to put a flop to every thing of this kind, and to observe the most exact neutrality. But among a money-loving people this was but ill observed, and therefore orders were given to the commanders of the English ships, to seize all Dutch ships on which were provisions, stores, ammunition or any other thing belonging to or intended for the enemy: which orders were well obeyed, and caused great complaints in Hol'and against the parliament, who, however, were not to be moved from their resolution (e). In the beginning of January, 1643, the States-General fent ambassadors into Ergland, who, though respectfully treated by the parlia-

(e) See Secrets difcovered; or England's complaint against the States-General. 4to. Lond. 1643. fpirit and conduct appeared in the behaviour

ment, made no address to it, but repaired to the King at Oxford, and, after abiding there fix weeks, returned to London 14, 1643. They then presented A paper to each of the Speakers of the houses of parliament. with a memorandum to that delivered to the house of e peers, in these words: Delivered by the embassadors of the lords estates, unto Mounsier the Baron Grey of Werk, Speaker, to be communicated to the lords 6 of the parliament, this 14 day of March, 1643. The other to the Speaker of the house of commons, with a memorandum in these words; Delivered by the embassadors of the lords estates, unto Mr. William Lenthall, Speaker, to be communicated to the Srs commons of parliament this 14 day of March, 1642. To the matter of these papers, the lords and commons could give no answer, in respect they were not addressed to them in such words, either for the matter or manner, as that they could legally, and according to the course of parliament, take notice of them as directed to themselves. However, that the ambassadors might not plead ignorance concerning the form of address, the parliament were willing that some of their members should repair to them, to acquaint them therewith, who did accordingly, and left the fame in writing with them: but this for the present made no alteration in their behaviour. On the 4th of May, 1644, the ambassadors came to the Speaker of the house of commons, and by him presented their service to the parliament, protesting their defires to do good; but that they met with no fuccess; and so took their leave for Oxford again. But when they perceived the parliament army to come near to Oxford, where they then were, with the King, they came out with white flags before them, and moved the Earl of Essex, for a treaty: his excellency assured them that it belonged only to the parliament to appoint such a treaty. Upon this they returned to Oxford; and from thence they came with their white flags, which were

viour of the new commonwealth, which fur-

still carried before them all the way as they passed, even into the city of London. Some persons from Oxford came up in their train, obnoxious to the parliament. 'After their return hither, about the 19th of · June, fays the parliament, they fent medages to the houses, that they had something to deliver from your ' lordships; Ithe States of Holland, to whom the declaration from whence I transcribe this is addressed? whereunto, about two or three days after, this an-' fwer was fent them; that the houses did expect that 4 they should make their demand of audience in writing, with which if the houses rested satisfied, that they would come to them as to the parliament of England, audience should be given them in each house e apart; which they did by their writing dated the 5th of July, whereby they presented their desires as to the 6 lords and commons affembled in the parliament of 6 England, and thereupon had audience given them in each house the 18th day of the same month, with a 6 most honourable and respective reception. At the fame time they delivered their letters of credence from ' your lordships, and offered their interposition and mediation for the composing the differences between his Majesty and the parliament, which they left in writing, together with a memorial for reparation of damages fultained by fome merchants and mafters of ships of the United-provinces, in their ships and course of trading, with defire that commissioners might be appointed for fettling the things complained of."--- This had the semblance of fair dealing. - But the Dutch ambaffadors were far enough from interpoling and mediating impartially. For in their letters to their masters they cenfured the parliament's proceedings, misrepresented their defigns, and made applications for peace on terms unsuitable to the safety and welfare of the parliament (f). With respect to the damages they pretended to have suftained in their ships, it appeared to have been in a good mea-

(f) Declaration of the Parliament of England, written to the high and mighty Lords, the States-General, &c. 4to. Lond. printed for Laurence Blatklock, 1648.

furprised the nations. The war was commenced measure redressed by the parliament, though they were importunately clamorous and troublesome on this head, and at the same time did the ships of the parliament damage to a very confiderable amount, without making Declaration any fatisfaction (g).—I have the more willingly given of the Lords the account of these matters, because the declarations in and Commons of the which they are contained are very little known, and proceeding the memory of the facts like to be loft; the declarations, with the though some of the finest in the English tongue, in point dors of the of composition, being unaccountably omitted in the Par- States-Geliamentary History, where their importance justly inti-neral. 4to, tled them to a place. But to return—The fame incli-Sept. 18, nation to the royal cause was discovered by the Dutch 1645. on other occasions. They interposed with regard to the execution of Charles I. they made compliments of condolence to Charles II. on the murder, as they called it, of his royal father; acknowledged him to be rightful (b) Orand lawful King of England (b), and afforded him a monde's refuge in their dominions. The ministers in Holland pers, vol. i. came likewise in a body to the King, and declared p. 223. their detestation of the faid horrid murder; and the ' Sunday following preached in most of the churches thereabouts, against the impiety and wickedness thereof: whereby the people there were very much enraged against all that had favoured or affisted any ways the ' rebels in England; infomuch that Strickland (their agent there) dared not to go out of his lodging, for ' fear the people would tear him in pieces (i).' This (i) Id. ibid. was the temper and disposition of the Dutch, as described by Sir G. Radeliff, in a letter written from the Hague, Feb. 13-23, 1648-9. And 'tis well known that Dr. Doristaus, who was fent over thither to act as a jointagent with Strickland, was affaffinated on the fecond day of May following, and his murtherers permitted to efcape; though it must be confessed at the same time, that the States-General offered a reward of a 1000 gilders for apprehending the affaffins, and declared it death

menced and carried on in a manner equally for any to harbour them. The following extract from Wicgefort, will in a good degree confirm what has been here related.- 'The party of the parliament at London was already very confiderable, when it fent Walter Strickland to the Hague in the month of September, 6 1642; but as foon as he had demanded audience, · Bosuell, who was there on the part of the King of · England, opposed it, and represented that the parliament being but a body without a foul, in the absence, and without the King's, warrantry, had neither the ' power to determine any thing within the country, nor the authority to fet on foot negotiations out of the kingdom, without the permission of its sovereign. Strickland feeing that the States-General (to whom he ' had fent his letters of credence) returned him no meffage, went one day into one of their ante-rooms, and demanded audience. They fent him word by two deputies, that his letter of credence not being yet translated out of English, the States defired him to confider if it might not be proper for him to give in his proposals in writing, that they might be translated at the fame time: but he made answer, that he had orders to deliver them by word of mouth, and that if they delayed giving him audience that day, he would take it as a refulal, and would confider what was proe per for him to do. This resolution obliged the States to fend him a deputy of each Province, to whom he laid open his commission, and left with them his proopofals in writing; however he had no public audience, notwithstanding the deputies of the province of Hol-' land asked it with as much warmth as himself. States-General came to some resolutions upon his ! memorial, and affured him they would always observe an exact neutrality between the King and the parliament. An expression that gives to understand, that the States acknowledged that there were two parties formed in England, and that, for particular reasons, (which honourable to those who directed and those who

(which cannot be unknown) they had more confideration for the one than the other. They gave fufficient testimony thereof the second voyage the same Strickland made to the Hague, immediately after the death of the late King, which had not removed the difficulties of his admiffion. Doriflaus, his colleague, had been murthered there; fo that Strickland, not thinking himself safe, made pressing instances to be admitted, and dispatched. The deputies of Holland feconded his instances, and continually represented; that audience could not be refused him without breaking the neutrality, which the States had promifed to opreserve inviolable. But all these good offices were of no use, for the deputies of the fix other Provinces declared, they could come to no resolution in an affair of this nature without the express order of their principals, who did not explain themselves upon the e matter: insomuch that Strickland (who was in constinual uneafiness on the account of the accident which ' had happened to Doriflaus) feeing the obstinacy of the fix provinces, backed by the authority of the prince 6 of Orange, was invincible, went back to England. 'This proceeding of theirs was the more furprizing, because the States had an ambassador with the same e parliament, whose minister they treated so unworthily, ' and which not wanting the means to refent it, foon revenged itself so cruelly, that there was all the reafon in the world to repent of the little regard had been · shewn to a power, which made a great part of Europe (k) Embasatremble (k).

The parliament, to whom the temper and conduct p. 7. Fol. of the Dutch were not unknown, determined, if pof- Lond. 1716. fible, to alter their disposition, and bring them into an union with themselves. For this end it was reported by the Lord Viscount Liste from the council of state, as the opinion of that council, 'That as the state of affairs now stands, a public minister be sent from the par-

Functions,

who executedit. So that confidering the valour and e parliament to the present assembly of the United Pro-And it being refolved by the parliament that a public minister be sent thither, it was referred to the council of flate to confider of fuch persons as they ' should think fit to be fent from the parliament, and (1) Journal, 6 to prepare instructions, commissions, and letters of credence for them (1). In pursuance of this order, the council of state presented the Lord Chief-Justice St. John, and Wa'ter Strickland, Esq; to be sent as ambassadors extraordinary to the United-Provinces, who being approved of by the parliament, had their commission, instructions and letters of credence delivered to them by (m) Journal, Mr. Speaker, in the house, by the command of the parliament (m). And to prevent such another attempt as had been made upon our former agent, forty gentlemen were appointed to attend him [St. John] for his fecurity and honour, ten thousand pounds being delivered to the lord ambassadors steward, for the ex-' pence of the embally. Yet this great equipage was not sufficient to prevent a public affront which was (n) Ludlow, offered him by Prince Edward, one of the Palatine family, as he was passing the streets (n).' The ambaffadors arrived at Rotterdam, March 14, 1651. N.S. On the 20th, they were admitted to an audience in the affembly of the States-General at the Hague, where St. John, in a very handsome speech, after having mentioned the antient alliances between the two nations, and the mutual benefit refulting from thence, declared 'That the parliament did desure that this pious and strict "confederacy and league of amity, derived from their ancestors unto them, may from themselves be trans-mitted unto posterity, if God so please: and such, faid he, is the fincere love and good will which the commonwealth of England beareth unto their neighbours of the United-Provinces, begotten and conferved upon the grounds before expressed, that they are willing to enter into a more intimate alliance and

6 neater

21 Jan. 1650.

Feb. 25,

1650.

vol. i. p. 344.

and wisdom exerted, and the success which ate nearer union with them than formerly hath been, whereby a more real and intrinsical interest of each in other, may be contracted for their mutual good .--My Lords, you fee the commonwealth of England (notwithstanding the many discouragements they have found, and just cause given them of laying aside the thought of any further motion of this kind) have begun to you, and in matters of highest concernment unto both; led thereunto, (such is the mercy of God) onot out of necessity but choice. This their good will deferves all acceptation on your part, with whom it onow rests, and will, they doubt not, produce resolu-' tions answerable and timely; and whatsoever issue it 6 shall please God in his wisdom to give, they shall always have the fatisfaction of having done what befitted them, and what the welfare of the true reformed (0) Parliareligion, and the other great and common interests mentary of both States obliged them to do (0). The Eng-History, lish ambassadors on the 10th of May following proposed 469, 470. to the States-General that the two commonwealths might be confederated friends, joined and allied together for the defence and preservation of the liberties and freedom of the people of each, against all whomsoever that shall attempt the disturbance of either state by sea or land; or be declared enemies to the freedom and liberties of the people living under either of the faid goloe, vol. is vernments (p). In short, they proposed an intire union p. 182. and coalition. One article in their proposals is too remarkable to be omitted .- We propound, fay they, that no rebel or declared enemy of the commonwealth of England, shall be received into or be suffered to abide in any of the castles, towns, ports, creeks, or 6 other places priviledged or not priviledged, which the Prince of Orange, Princess Mary, the relict of William late Prince of Orange, or any other person of what degree foever, have or hereafter shall have or posses by any title whatsoever within the dominions

tended the commonwealth in this war, as well

as

and jurisdictions of the United-Provinces, nor suffered by the faid Prince, Princess, or any other perfon, to be received into or abide therein; neither shall the Lords States of the United-Provinces, permit or fuffer in any of the places aforefaid, any affistance, counsel or favour, in ships, men, money, victuals, or in any other manner to be given, by the faid Prince or Princess, or any other person, to any such rebel or declared enemy, but shall openly and expresly prohibit and hinder the fame. And if the Prince of · Orange and Princess Mary, or any other person or e persons living or remaining in the jurisdiction of the United-Provinces, or under their power, do to the contrary hereof, then as well the faid prince and princess, and all and every such other person and persons 6 fo doing as aforesaid, shall for their respective lives, forfeit and lofe all fuch castles, towns, villages, lands, 4 and other places, which they or any of them shall at fuch time have or pretend to have by any title what-· foever; and likewise that no rebels or declared ene-6 my of the States of the United-Provinces shall be received into, or be suffered in any of the castles, towns, ports, or other places, priviledged or not priviledged, which any person or persons, of what degree or qua-Iity soever he be, have or shall hold or possess within the commonwealth of England or dominion thereof, by any title whatfoever, nor fuffered by any fuch perfon or persons, or any other, to be received thereinto, or abide therein, under like penalties (q).' The States General did not feem at all desirous of this coalition, though they refused not to treat thereon: but while the negotiation was on foot, St. John receiving the affront above-mentioned, complained thereof to the States more than once, and affured them that the parliament expected reparation. The ambassadors also protested in the name of the commonwealth of England, against the States styling the late King, Charles I. Which implies, faid

(q) Thurloe, vol. i. p. 183. And Journal, 29th Ap. 1651. as in the reduction of Scilly, Fersey, Guern-Jey, faid they, that there is a fecond Charles King of Eng-· land.

In this spirited manner, agreeably to their instructions, did these gentlemen behave, and so little were they disposed to have the sovereignty of their masters attacked, even in the most distant manner. But though the ambassadors were extremely diligent, nothing to the purpose was to be done with the Dutch, as appears by the following extract of a letter from Mr. Thurloe to Mr. Walter Frost, secretary to the council of state; dated Hague, June 6-16, 1651. 'If we had not by a 5 good providence of God got ane opportunity to put ' this people to a tryal by our being continued here, they might by their last paper, wherein they offerred the treaty of 1495, and their large professions, past with the credulous people of England for some kind of honest men, and good neighbours; but upon this occasion, I am confident they appear to be perfectly of the Scots mould, by converse with whom and the French, they have learnt the art of making huge professions, and in such a manner, that men are almost e necessitated to believe them; and at the same time, intend to perform no more of them than apparently flands with their own advantage; which yet I am confident they will not arrive at upon this occasion; and I hope God will give wisdom to my lords so to maage their farewell in that manner, that the commonwealth of England shall not lose either in honour or (r) Thurloe, interest upon this occasion (r). The day fixed the vol. i. p. fecond time (for the first had been expired, and a farther day given at the request of the States) being near at hand, the ambassadors gave notice of their intended departure to the States, expressing their forrow for the unsuccessfulness of their negotiation, and their hopes that hereafter a treaty might be concluded. Where-upon the States-General in a declaration justified their proceedings; entreated the flay of the ambaffadors; and

S.3

fey, Man, Virginia and Barbadoes; confidering,

professed their readiness to contribute their best endeavours to perfect the treaty. This of course produced a recapitulation, in which, after shewing how unsatisfactory the answers to their propositions had been, the ambassadors concluded in the following manner: 6 As to their diffatisfaction concerning our coming away, we conceived, that we had faid enough therein to their commissioners, whom they had fent twice to us about the same; as that the parliament had now thrice fent their agents and ministers unto them; and that as they were no way bound to fend them unto them at all, so was it in their own choice and power to limit the time of their abode. Neither were they therein furprized, we having always from the first day of the treaty told them, that our time was ' limited and but short; and that therefore a slow proceeding on their part would render the treaty fruitless; and that they had cause rather to take it as a great expression of love and friendship in the parliament, that they alone had so often and for so long time intended and profecuted these matters of joint and equal con-cernment unto both States; and that when the commonwealth of England is out of possession of what they ought to enjoy by the treaty of 1495, and the Netherlands in the full possession of what is of greatest advantage unto them by that treaty; that yet the commonwealth of England should be content in this friendly and amicable way of a treaty, to feek and expect from them a performance of what is done on (1) Thurloe, their parts (s).'—When the States commissioners came to take leave of the ambassadors at their departure, it is said St. John spoke to them in these terms:

My Lords, you have an eye upon the event of the affairs of the kingdom of Scotland, and therefore do refuse the friendship we have offerred. Now I can ' affure you, that many in the parliament were of opionion that we should not have come hither, or any

vol. i. p. 195.

dering, I say, the conquests made both at home

ambassadors to be sent to you before they had superated these matters between them and that King, and then expected your ambaffadors to us. I now perceive our error, and that these gentlemen were in the right: in a short time you shall see that business ended, and then you will come to us and feek what we have freely offerred, when it shall perplex you Chronicle of that you have refused our proffer (t).'—On the re-the Civil turn of the ambassadors, they, by order, attended the Wars, p. house, and sitting in their places as members, St. John, Lond, 1676.
the lord ambassador Strickland standing by him, gave an account of their negotiation; and it was refolved that the parliament doth approve of all the proceedings of the lords ambassadors, and that they have the ' thanks of the house, for their great and faithful ser-' vice.' The proceedings in this treaty were also ordered to be entered in a book by themselves, and all persons prohibited from inspecting the same (except members of parliament) without leave. And the whole matter of the report, and the several papers, were referred to the council of state to consider what was fit to be done therein, for the best advantage of the com-(u) Journal, monwealth, and to report the same to the house (u).—2d July, On the 9th of October, the house passed the samous 1651. act intitled by them, Goods from foreign parts by whom to be imported:' prohibiting goods to be imported, from Asia, Africa, America, and even Europe, with some few exceptions, into England, Ireland or the dominions thereunto belonging, but in English vessels. This was the famous navigation act, of which more shall be spoken hereafter. The states being highly provoked hereat, fent over ambassadors to mitigate if possible the rigour of this law, and bring things to an accommodation. Commissioners hereupon were empowered by the parliament to hear their proposals, and make proper de-mands on the behalf of the commonwealth. For demands they had about the Amboyna business; the fishery;

home and abroad, and the attention paid to the right of the flag; and other matters in which the interest and the dignity of the English nation were concerned. But while the negotiation was carried on, in May 1652, the fleets of the two republics being near each other an engagement enfued, to the advantage of the English, who funk one Dutch ship and took another *. The Dutch ambaffadors, alarmed at this encounter, which had turned out so unexpectedly to their disgrace, put in feveral papers to the council of state, ' Protesting that what happened was without the knowledge and against the wills of their masters; that 'twas with grief and aftonishment they had heard the fatal news of that rash action; that they were greatly desirous of concluding things in an amicable manner, and therefore requested that by no means the business of the concluding of the treaty be put off, and that fuch unfortunate mischances may be avoided, and an everlasting peace established between both the nations.' But little heed was given to these requests or apologies. By admiral Blake's relation; by the information of two Dutch captains, prisoners, taken before general Cromwell, and Dennis Bond, Esq; at Dover, May 22, 1652; and from feveral other examinations taken at that time, before the fame gentlemen, it appearing that the Dutch fought an opportunity to quarrel, and to brave us upon our own

^{*} The Dutch account, as given in Burchett, is as follows: 'Van 'Tromp put to sea with the sieet, to eonvoy home some merchant ships, but had orders to avoid engaging with the English, if possible, and to pay the usual respect to their slag, if he chanced to meet them in the narrow seas. He was forced by a tempest on the English coast, but quitted it again as soon as possible, and made towards Calais; but being informed that the English were pursuing some merchant ships, he advanced to their relief, and met Blake with the English sleet, who had orders (the Dutch say) to attack them. Tromp prepared to give the usual honors to the English slag, and ordered one of his captains to go on board with a compliment to the English admiral; but Blake having no regard to these marks of submission, fired twice at Tromp's ship, who made no return till he had received a third shot, and then the fight began. Naval History, p. 293.

OLIVER CROMWELL.

the grandeur and welfare of the nation in all

coast, the parliament returned the following answer to the papers of their ambassadors. The parliament of the commonwealth of England, calling to mind with what continued demonstrations of friendship, and fincere affections, from the very beginning of their intestine troubles they have proceeded towards their neighbours of the United-Provinces, omitting on nothing on their part that might conduce to a good correspondence with them, and to a growing up into a more near and strict union than formerly, do find s themselves much surprized with the unsutable returns 6 that have been made thereunto, and especially at the e acts of hostility lately committed in the very roads of • England upon the fleet of this commonwealth, the matter of fact whereof stated in clear proofs, is hereunto annexed; [they are Blake's letter, and depositions just above mentioned] upon ferious and deliberate confideration of all, and of the feveral papers delivered in by your excellencies to the councel of state, the e parliament thinks fit to give this answer to those pae pers: The parliament, as they would be willing to make a charitable construction of the expressions used in the faid papers, endeavouring to represent the late engagement of the fleets to have happened without the knowledge, and against the mind of your superiours; 6 fo when they confider how disagreeable to that profession the resolutions and actions of your state and been, even in the midst of a treaty offerred by themselves, and managed here by your excellencies, the extraordinary preparations of one hundred and fifty fail of men of war, without any visible occasion but what doth now appear (a just s ground of jealousie in your own judgments, when vour lordships pretended to excuse it) and the instructions themselves given by your said superiours to their commanders at sea, do find too much cause to believe that the lords, the states general of the United-Proall these transactions, we are not to wonder that vinces, have an intention, by force to usurp the known ' rights of England in the feas, to destroy the fleets that are, under God, their walls and bulwarks, and thereby expose this commonwealth to invasion at their pleafure, as by this late action they have attempted to do: ' whereupon the parliament conceive they are obliged to endeavour, with God's affistance, as they shall have opportunity, to feek reparation of the wrongs already ' fuffered, and security that the like be not attempted for the future. Nevertheless, with this mind and defire, that all differences betwixt the nations may (if ' possibly) be peaceably and friendly composed, as God by his providence shall open a way thereunto, and circumstances shall be conducing to render such en-Parliament 6 deavours less dilatory, and more effectual than those of this kind heretofore used have been.

HEN. SCOBELL, cleric. Parliamenti (a).

This declaration does honor to the parliament, who had ordered all Dutch ships to be seized on hearing of John Field. the late action at fea, and from henceforth determined to carry on a war with the states in the most vigorous manner. Sir Henry Vane, who made so great a figure during these times, is said to have been the chief director and manager of this war, whose constant judgment it was, ' That the interest of England and the United-Provinces were as irreconcileable as those of rivals, trade being to both nations, what a mistress is unto lovers; that there never could intervene any durable (y) Stubbs's 6 peace, except both nations did unite by coalition, or farther Juf- 6 the English subjugate the others and reduce them into tification of 6 a province, or by firich conditions and contrivances ensure themselves against the growth and future puis-United-Ne- 6 fance of the Dutch (y). How great the difinterestedness therlands, p. of Vane was, how follicitous for the honor of the na-Lond. 1673. tion, and how much bent that the public might be ferved

(x) The Aniwer of the to three Papers delivered by the Ambaffadors of the United-Provinces, Lond. printed for 4to 1652.

the War

with the

119. 4to.

OLIVER CROMWELL.

that men imputed to them the greatest

ed on the easiest and best terms, appears from the following anecdote: ' The fees of his office were; as treafurer of the navy, four-pence in the pound, which ly ' reason of this war honestly amounted to little less than 4 30000 l. per annum; but Sir Henry Vane looked upon it as too much for a private subject, and therefore ' very generously gave up his patent (which he had for ' life from King Charles I.) to the parliament, desiring but two thousand pounds per annum, for an agent he had bred up to the business, and the remainder to go to the public. This was done, and the method of (2) Collins's a fixed falary has continued ever fince in that of-Peerage, vol. fice (z) *.' This was indeed a rare example of v. p. 303. honor and integrity, and hardly to be believed in this 1756. age, in which patriots and courtiers have fcrambled for places, preferments, bonusses, &c. in such an open and shameless manner, as to have rendered it doubtful whether all pretentions to public spirit, were not veils to ambition and avarice.—But to proceed.—Fleets were now fitted out, both by England and Holland, and fuch noble exploits were done by Blake and others, as have

In the Journals we find ' That upon a petition of Sir Henry Vane, knight, treasurer of the navy, it was referred to the committee of the anay, to consider of this petition, and how the office of treasurer of the navy may be managed for the future, for the best profit and least charge of the commonwealth; and what falary is fit to be allowed for the execution thereof; and also to consider what compensation is fit to be given unto the petitioner, out of that office, or otherwife, in confideration of his right in the faid office.' This was on the 27th of June, 1650. On the 16th of July following, the committee made their report, and the house resolved, That as a fit compensation to be given to Sir Henry Vane, treasurer of the navy, for the surrender of his right in the said place, and in confideration of the profit which will thereby accrue to the state, there be settled on the faid Sir Henry Vane, his heirs and assigns for ever, to the clear yearly value of twelve hundred pounds per annum over and above all charges and reprifes, out of the lands belonging to the late ' deans and chapters.'- It was also resolved, ' That a fit and able perfon should be appointed treasurer of the navy, who should personally attend upon that employment, and be allowed for the entertainment and falary, for himfelf, his deputies and clerks, one thousand pounds e per annum, in lieu of all falaries, fees, and other profits formerly be-' longing to the place of treasurer of the navy,'---- We see by this, Mr. Collins has not been sufficiently exact.

rendered their memories dear to all true lovers of their country. The particulars are to be found in most of our common histories, and thither I must refer the reader defirous of information on this subject. Whilst the war was carrying on in a manner glorious to the English commonwealth, the parliament omitted nothing which might make it terminate in such a manner as to prevent all future disputes between the two nations. With great diligence and dexterity they got intelligence of the most private designs and resolutions of the enemy, and took as much care as possible to conceal their own; nor would they abate the least in their proposals for peace, though applied to most submissively by ambassadors sent from the states for that purpose. The following extracts willabundantly confirm and explain what is here mentioned. -The Dutch ambassadors, in a letter to N. Ruwich, dated Westminster, July 4, 1653, N.S. say, ' We are obliged to advise their high and mighty lordships that ' men here have full knowledge, with all the circum-(a) Thurloe, c stances of the resolutions taken upon the fifth of ' June (a).' In a letter of intelligence from the Hague, dated the 28th of the same month, we read what follows: What I have always feared is now come to ' pass, that intimation should be given here of the good intelligence you have there of the affairs here. Our deputies there have written hither to thefe states, that they have affurance from their friends in England, that all the fecret actings here, and were it possible, the very thoughts of these states are most exactly and weekly presented in writing to the councel of state there. This was hotly debated in the affembly, every one asking the other, who betrayed them; and some quarrels were like to arise, but a fort of composure was made, and orders given for strict secresy in all their proceedings; fo that much difficulty will be in ' furnishing you; however I shall attempt always to ferve you as long as I can. But if you have not fecrefy, you are not worthy of the profit thereof. Our deputies there begin to give very good intelligence from London, however they get it (b).' The 18th of this month, we find the following short letter written by Bever-

vol. i. p. 316.

(b) Id. p. 359.

Beverning, one of the ambaffadors, to Mr. Gerard Cinque at Goude. 'Sir, I dare not write much news. All our actions are spied. We have spies set to watch us in our houses. We cannot be certain of any thing that we do, that it shall not be either known or miscarry. If you please to have any thing sent you from bence, that this country affords, pray let me know (c) Thurloe, it (c).'—We are not however to suppose but some vol. i. p. intelligence was gotten by these ambassadors. Money does wonders, and flattery is all powerful. They who can dextroufly apply the one and the other, need not fear of some success. The following passage will shew that they were ordered to be on the look out, and that they had not been idle. It was written from the Hague, October 31. N. S. and feems to come from the same hand which fent that of the 28th of July just mentioned. Since my last to you, the post immediately before this, great diligence is used and secret enquiry made,

how your council of state comes by the secret resolutions of this state, and the letters of their public ministers abroad; and our deputies who are gone to · England have in charge to do their utmost there, whatever it costs to find it out. Of which I advertize wou very feriously, to the end hereafter these secrets be onot read in open council, and that prevention may be, e least the deputies might learn, from them, that told ' to them part, how to discover the whole. But I hope and believe I am not betrayed, fo as to be known by ' name or description to any of the council, fince some of them are so kind as to tell all they know to the · Dutch deputies, to their advantage. I can swear the two deputies standing there did write at full, what I e gave you in my last; but this notwithstanding, all the chief of their business shall be had one way or other, if you do not spoil all there, as well was attempted (d). (d) Id. p. And how much the parliament were concerned for the honor and interest of the nation appeared from their demanding as preliminaries to a treaty, that the Dutch should call back their ships; make reparation for damages, and fatisfaction for the expences England had been put to defend herself and maintain her rights (e).' (e) Id. p.

-Among 291.

-Among the articles infifted on by the English was the following. 'That the ships and vessels of the said United-Provinces, as well men of war, as others, be they fingle thips, or in fleets, meeting at fea with any of the ships of war of this state of England, or in their service and wearing the flag, shall strike the · flag, and lower their topfail until they be passed by, and shall likewise submit themselves to be visited if thereto required, and perform all other respects due to the faid commonwealth of England, to whom the doe minion and fovereignty of the British feas belong? · To this article, the Dutch ambassadors, November 22, 1653, did not make any exception, either to the firiking of the flag, or the fovereignty of the fea; but they protested against the visiting their ships, as repugnant to the practice of their country, and subject to a thousand disorders and disputes, and injuries to their fate; besides the visiting is not to be reciprocal. Whereupon Cromwell in the name of the commissioe ners replied, that the searching of their ships was no e new thing; but an undoubted right which natu-' rally followed from the fovereignty of the fea, the which did appertain to England: it was likewise an efflux of the fame dominion, for the English to pre-' fcribe to them, with what number of ships of war they fhould pass the British seas: that they ought to be much " more zealous now for the afferting of the faid antient dominion of the fea in all its branches; because it had been so lately and so notoriously disputed and invaded. And whereas the ambaffadors had somewhat boastingly said in their memorial, that their people were of fach generofity that they would never endure fuch terms: to this Cromwell faid he would reply no (f) Stubbs's 6 more, than that we were Englishmen, and had not farther Jus- 6 lost our courage (f). The parliament insisted likewife that the Dutch should pay for licence to fish upon the British coasts, and suspended the treaty, on account of their unwillingness to agree thereunto, though 'tis afferted they offered 300000 %, to procure amity and 12. 1d. P. 65. friendship with England (g). These demands of the parliament may feem high, but they endeavoured to

tincation, p.

justify themselves to the world, by causing Selden's Mare Clausum seu de Dominio Maris' to be translated into English, by Marchamont Nedham. This, by special command, was published in November 1652. In a fine and spirited dedication to the supream authority of the nation, the parliament of the commonwealth of England,' the translator observes, it is a gallant sight to see the sword and pen in victorious equipage together; for this subdues the souls of men by reason, that only their bodies by force. The pen it is which manisests the right of things; and, when that is once cleared, it gives spurs to resolution, because men are never raised to so high a pitch of action, as when they are persuaded, that they engage in a righteous cause; according to that old versiele, · Frangit & attollit vires in Milite causa.

Wherefore, feeing you (right honourable) have had fo frequent experience of the truth of this in our late wars, wherein the pen militant hath had as many fharp rencounters as the fword, and borne away as many trophies from home-bred enemies, in profecution of your most righteous cause by land, certain-'ly you will yield it no less necessary, for the instruc-' tion of this generous and ingenious people, in vindicating your just rights by sea against the vain pretences and projects of encroaching neighbours. For, what true English heart will not swell, when it shall be made clear and evident (as in this book) that the ' fovereignty of the feas, flowing about this island, hath, in all times, whereof there remains any written testi-' mony, both before the old Roman invasion and fince. under every revolution, down to the present age, been held and acknowledged by all the world, as an infe-' parable appendant of the British empire; and that, by ' virtue thereof, the kings of England successively, have had the fovereign guard of the feas; that they have 6 imposed taxes and tributes upon all ships passing and fishing therein; that they have obstructed and opened the passage thereof to strangers, at their own pleasure, defigns (NN), and fuch as would carry them to and done all other things that may testify an absolute

e fea-dominion; what English heart (I say) can consider these things, together with the late actings of the · Netherlanders, fet forth in your publick declaration, and onot be inflamed with an indignation answerable to ' their infolence; that these people, raised out of the dust at first into a state of liberty, and at length to a high degree of power and felicity, by the arms and benevolence of England; or that they, who, in times ' past, durst never enter our seas to touch a herring, ' without licence first obtained by petition from the ' governor of Scarborcugh-castle, should now presume to war, bid defiance to the united powers of these three

(i) Of the Dominion or Ownerthip of the Sea. Folio. invade them with armed fleets, and, by a most unjust London: Printed by anations (i)?'—But, whilft the parliament were thus William Du-Gard, labouring for the public welfare, they were dispossessed by the apof their power by Cromwell, and deprived of a glory pointment of the Council they well deserved, that of finishing a successful, wellof State.

conducted war, by a fafe and advantageous peace. (NN) Vast designs were imputed to the commonwealth.] Nothing can give us a better idea of the light in which England was viewed abroad, than the following passages from Sortiere. They are taken from a letter written by him to the celebrated M. de Courcelles, at Amsterdam, dated Orange, July 1, 1652. The English republicans took things exactly right; and that, in order to the accomplishing of a design, that would take up all their life-time (for fuch fort of men ought e never to conceive mean ones, after the execution whereof they must be put to the trouble of projecting a new, or live lazily, and be exposed to conspiracies against them) they thought it would be their best way 6 to begin with the ruin of the United Provinces, which ' lay next their coasts, and sourished in trade above any other country in the world; and, when once they had effected this, they were in hopes they should eafily remove any obstacle in their way to attain the

to the pinnacle of glory.—And, if we turn our dominion of the feas: infomuch, that, if the fortune of war should favour their first enterprizes, I do not think they have any defign to make a peace with a and to nation they have a mind utterly to destroy, and to whom they will propose such hard terms, that, upon the refusal of them, you will, at last, find them prepared to make terrible descents in divers parts of Zea-6 land, and North Holland, to break the banks, and the other dykes, that keep the flat country from being drowned. There needs no more than this fort of blood letting to make Amsterdam, and all the other cities, desolate. For, it would fignify little to them to feize the Brill, or some other place, seeing their design is to destroy the trade of Holland, and to transfer it into their own country; and it would be of e little importance to them, that the King of Spain 6 should, in the mean time, recover the seven provinces; that the merchants of Amsterdam should remove to Antwerp, and the manufactures of Leyden and Harlem to Ghent and Bruges: for it would require many years to fettle things there, and the Eng-lifb would have opportunity enough to hinder them from having any necessary materials, but such as pasfed through their own hands, and their manufactures ' to be transported any where but in English bottoms: for it would be very easy for them to stop up the ' mouths of the ports, and to go up the Schelde, even in fight of Antwerp, from whence nothing must come out but will be taken by their ships. By this means, and the notion I have of their defigns, no nation in the world, in a few years time, would have any seae men, ships, or skill in maritime affairs, belides them-' selves: for Holland being entirely ruined, the Dutch " must serve on board their fleets, and all the shipwrights, fail-makers and rope-makers, would be 6 obliged to go and earn their living in the fea-port towns of England; and this they would be the more 6 in-our eyes to their conduct at home, we shall find inclined to do, because there is more wages given there, and people live better. When this noble and rich province, which, within the extent of less than five and twenty leagues, contains eighteen large towns, and four hundred villages, of which the Hague is the finest in the world, shall be reduced to this sad plight; its then likely the English will turn their arms against Denmark, in order to seize the Sundt, either by main force, or rather some treaty, by which they will be willing to give the King more than the profit it brought him, but, at the fame time, will oblige Norway to fell their wood to no other nation but the English. The cities of Embden, Bremen, Hamburg, Lubec, all the coast of the Baltic, and the whole kingdom of Sweden, durst appear no longer at sea, but under English colours; and, perhaps, the formidable republic will be content, in confideration of her commissions granted to them, to receive certain duties from the goods she allows them in her name 6 to transport, only along these northern parts. They will in time fend a more powerful fleet to block up the river of Liston, while another fails to Brasil, Guinea, and the East-Indies, with a design to spare the Pertugueze merchants, and the East-India compainies, the labour of transporting the fugars, filks, spices, and other commodities, they come thither for, ' into Europe: and if Spain pretends to fay any thing against them, they will, without any more ado, seize the Streights mouth, and fend an hundred and fifty fhips of war into the Mediterranean, out of which • they can very eafily drive the naval force of the other optentates of Europe, were they all joined together against them. The English having in this manner usurped the dominion of the seas, the trade of all the European nations, and part of the rest of the world: all the earth must submit to them, work for no body but them, and they'll, from time to time, come into their ports, and sweep away all find it equally admirable. By deeds of peace they their treasure: every thing that is rare, and all the conveniences of life, produced either by art or nature, will be referved for England, which will be the only country that can purchase them, or possess them of their own. For, as we see, that since the settling of trade in Holland, that province is become the storehouse for linnen, woollen, and all forts of manufactures; though there is neither flax, wool, nor, in a manner, any other commodities which they work up, grows there, but they must fetch them from other countries; fo every thing that England wants at this time will abound there, and the best artificers will flock thither; in fo much, that, if they would have any fine linnen, or good cloth for wear, in another country, the flax and wool was to be fent to be maonufactured in England. Pray, confider then, what e vast wealth this country must acquire in less than fifty vears? and how miserable must the rest of Europe be, fince they can transport nothing by sea, from one nation to another, but in English ships? They will always have money to receive in all the ports they come at, and never leave any of their own there: what the English want they'll make compensation for, by way of exchange, or readily fend over into England upon the score of the manufactures there they have occasion for; as we have feen the Dutch East-India company have pearl and precious stones, in return for some wares fent into those countries, which they got fitted up at Amsterdam, and then fold them at a very dear rate in those places whence they were first brought, ' and where there is not that perfection of workmanfhip as there is with us. Hundreds of ships richly 6 laden will daily put into the Thames, and other ports of this fortunate island; and the general can scarce ever lose the fight of his forces, which, I may fay, freturn every evening to lie at home; for they stay no 6 longer in foreign parts than to refresh themselves, to e vend their goods, and to take in new cargoes.

they attempted to fettle and perpetuate the

will be no way follicitous of making conquests by land, that they may fave the charge of maintaining them, · feeing they are fure of reaping the profits of them; ' neither will they plant any colonies, and eafe their country, as populous as 'tis grown, of the vast multitudes that are in it, because the produce of all Eue rope is confumed there, and their great naval trade renders their stores inexhaustible. In the mean time, all the neighbouring kingdoms will, in a manner, become like the fea coasts of America, where our Eue ropeans trade: there will be only tillage and some ' coarse manusactures for plain wear, and to serve peoe ple's necessities only in the heart of the country, and the maritime towns will be no other than the granaries and magazines of England. These are my sentiments about this war, which, in the opinion of fome, may feem romantic, and of kin to Utopia, or the Republic of Plato; especially of those who do not confider that the wars that have been waged for twenty years past, I know not under what pretences or defigns, had nothing fo great or fublime in them as that which Cromwell proposes: for, in reality, there is no-' thing can come up to the thoughts of fubjecting all the earth to his country, and rendering it the most haughty and flourishing state in the world. It appears to me fo vast and magnificent a thought, that there is onothing in all the conquests of Alexander, and the opomp of all the Roman empire, that comes near this maritime dominion, which I have represented to you. 4 And it feems to me fo very feafible, that, if Holland be once ruined, I am afraid it will be too late to prevent it: and, therefore, I would have all the potenstates of Europe take it to heart in time; for, if they do not quickly put an end to the war they are engaged in on the continent, we shall run the risk, in a few ages, of becoming perfect barbarians. For the English, by means of their navigation, will transfer felicity and grandeur of the state. After

'all the politeness of Europe, together with its plenty, (k) Sorpower, and conveniences of life, into their own biere's voycountry (k). I have chose to give Sorbiere's opi-age into nion at length, not only as it shews us the sense men England, pthen had of the designs, skill, and management of this 8vo. Lond. new republic, but as it likewise instructs us in the vast 1709. advantages of navigation and commerce to a state. For nothing is more certain, than that they, who can acquire the trade of the world, will foon possess its power, riches commanding every thing requifite thereunto, if in the hands of the wife, brave and industrious. Such being the figure of the English commonwealth in the eyes of its neighbours, we are not to wonder that her friendship was courted by some of the most mighty monarchs, and that they treated her with honour and respect. Spain, France, Portugal addressed themselves to her by their agents and ambassadors, as did Denmark, Sweden, the free cities of Germany, and Holland, particularly, in a most suppliant manner. For reputation is power, and power is ever attended with deference and regard. I will close this note with the following extract from another foreign writer: 'The new republic, actuated by Cromwell's extensive and sublime genius, e procured England a tranquillity which it no longer ' hoped for, and gave it a lustre which it had not had for feveral centuries. It had just been agitated by a 6 most violent tempest, and now all was calm; it had thought itself on the brink of ruin, and was now in condition to give law. It is melancholy, for the ho-' nour of virtue, that one of the best and greatest spectacles, which the annals of nations prefent, should be the work of rebellion. Every thing appeared wonderful in this revolution. The royalists conformed to 'a kind of government ill adapted to their tempers, and disapproved by their consciences. The grandees, accustomed to the part of legislators, remained quietly in the rank of private subjects. The Irish and Scots, the British dominions were brought wholly to submit to their sovereignty, they passed an act of (00) oblivion, to quiet the minds of who had taken up arms, the first from an attachment to their kings, the other to efface the horror of their treachery, were unhappily subdued. The Dutch, who had taken advantage of the calamities of England, to usure the empire of the seas, were humbled. France and Spain, who had been always rivals, always enemies, meanly courted the friendship of the usurpers. The sovereigns, who ought to have united to revenge an outrage, to which all kings were exposed, either through sear or interest, applauded the injustice. All Europe debased itself, was silent, or admired (1).

(00) They passed an act of oblivion. On the twenty-fourth of February, one thousand fix hundred and fifty-one, the government passed an act, intitled, 'A general pardon and amnestie.' The preamble deserves notice, and is as follows: 'The parliament of England, having had good experience of the affection of the * people to this present government, by their ready asfistance in the defence thereof against Charles Stuart, fon of the late tyrant, and the forces lately invading under his command; and being much afflicted with the fense of the miserable and sad effects which the · late unnatural war hath produced; and refolving, next to the glory of God, and the advancement of the ' kingdom of Jesus Christ, to make no other use of the e many victories the Lord, in mercy, hath vouchsafed unto them, than a just fettling of the peace and freedom of this commonwealth; and being most desirous that the minds, persons and estates of all the people of this nation might be composed, settled and secured, 6 and that all rancour and evil will, occasioned by the

⁽¹⁾ Abbe Raynal's History of the Parliament of England, p. 200. 200. Lond. 1751. See also the quotations from Sydney and Trenchard, at the end of note (0).

of their subjects, as they before had the navigation

· late differences, may be buried in perpetual oblivion, that so the government, now established in the way of a free state, might be complied with, and all the e members of it enjoy their just and ancient rights and 6 liberties, and the former commotions and troubles end in a quiet, calm and comfortable peace, have re-' folved to do what in them lies for the obtaining and effecting thereof, leaving the fuccess and their endeavours unto the bleffing of God, and his working upon the spirits of those that are concerned herein: Be it therefore enacted, &c. (m) Mr. Ludlow attributes (m) Scobel's the passing this act at that time to the ambitious views of collections. Cromwell in part, and his defire of ingratiating himself with new friends; 'the parliament, fays he, were prevailed with by the importunities of some of their own e members, and in particular of general Cromwell, that fo he might fortify himself by the addition of new friends, for the carrying on his designs, to pass an act of general pardon and amnesty: whereby, though it had thirty-eight feveral exceptions, many persons, who deserved to pay towards the reimbursement of the publick, no less than those that had been already fined, escaped the punishment due to their misdemeanors, and the commonwealth was defrauded of great fums of money, by which means they were rendered unable to discharge many just debts owing to ' fuch as had ferved them with diligence and fidelity (n).' (n) Vol. i. In another place, speaking of the general's visible change p. 402. of temper and behaviour after the battle of Worcester, he fays, 'He now began to despise divers members of the house, whom he had formerly courted, and grew 6 most familiar with those whom he used to shew most aversion to; endeavouring to oblige the royal party, by procuring for them more favourable conditions than confisted with the justice of the parliament to grant, under colour of quieting the spirits of many people, and 6 keeping them from engaging in new disturbances to · rescue rescue themselves out of those fears which many who had acted for the King, yet lay under; tho', at the fame time, he defigned nothing, as, by the success, was most manifest, but to advance himself by all manoner of means, and to betray the great trust which the e parliament and the good people of England had re-oposed in him. To this end he pressed the act of obli-(0) Vol. ii. 'vion (o),' That the passing an act of oblivion in P. 448. itself was right, is manifest from the conduct of all wife princes and states after civil commotions; that it is better, on all these occasions, to incline to mercy than feverity, cannot well be called in question I think; and therefore Mr. Ludlow's censure on the act is not, perhaps, the most justly founded. That Cromwell pressed the act is probable. It became him as a good politician, considered meerly as a member of the parliament: as a man of ambition and great deligns, it was wife and well judged; nothing so easily procuring friends as generosity and forgiveness: though 'tis not at all unlikely that natural temper had a good share in all this transaction. For he was naturally humane and benevolent,

THELLFEOF

as appears from his procuring the liberty of those who were imprisoned on account of Love's plot (p); by his

(p) See Thurloe, vol. i. p. 765.

State papers, by Nickols, 20. 86.

endeavouring to free the estate of the Countess of Arundell and Surry from sequestration, and from his using his power for the obliging such as stood in need of pro-(3) Milton's tection and affistance, which was so well known, that we find the Marchioness of Ormande addressing herself to him for favour (q), though her lord had publicly treated his character but scurvily. His sentiments, with respect to the manner of dealing with his adverfaries, cannot be so well represented as by a letter written to his fon Henry at Dublin, Nov. 21, 1655 .-

· I do believe there may be fome particular persons, who are not very well pleased with the present condition of things, and may be apt to shew their discontent, as they have opportunity; but this should not make too great impressions on you. Tyme and pastience may worke them to a better frame of spirit,

and bring them to fee that, which, for the prefent,

feemes to be hid from them; especially if they shall vigation (PP) act to increase their wealth and power.

If

fee your moderation and love towards them, whilst they are found in other ways towards you; which · I earnestly desire you to studye and endeavour all that

' lyes in you, whereof both you and I too shall have the comfort, whatsoever the issue and event thereof be (r). These seem to be the sentiments of a hu-vel, i. p. mane heart, and, probably, induced him, and the par- 725. liament in general, to give ease and rest to their enemies by the act here spoken of, so much to their ho-

(PP) The navigation act. The parliament, from its first sitting, had been constantly engaged in great affairs. But they shewed themselves equal to them, though of different kinds. We have feen them direct the wars in which they were engaged with wifdom and prudence. The arts of peace they cultivated, and strove to raise the nation to the pinnacle of glory. How industrious they were their journals and public acts yet remaining abundantly testify. We may from them conclude, that levees were neither fo frequent, or of fo long continuance, as in other periods of time fince, when the important business of the nation has been forced to wait till the minister has been at leifure to give his attendance in the house.—But this by the way.— As a maritime people, trade and commerce claim the chief attention of the legislature of Britain. This the parliament were fenfible of, and therefore passed the act, intitled, 'Goods from foreign parts, by whom to be ' imported,' October 9, 1651. The preamble is short. but expressive. 'For the increase of the shipping and encouragement of the navigation of this nation, which, under the good providence and protection of 6 God, is so great a means of the welfare and safety of this commonwealth, Be it enacted, &c.' The chief clauses in this famous act are, that no goods shall be imported from Asia, Africa, or America, but in English thips, If to these we add the projection of an union ships, under the penalty of forfeiture of the said goods and thips: -- nor from any part of Europe, except in fuch veffels as belong to the people of that country, of which the goods are the growth or manufacture, under the like penalty !----that no falt-fish, whale-fins, or oil, should be imported, but what were caught or made by the people of England; nor no falt-fish to be exported, or carried from one port to another in this nation, but in English vessels, under the like penalty: but commodities from the Levant feas, the East-Indies, the ports of Spain or Portugal, might be imported from the usual ports or places of trading used heretofore, though the faid commodities were not the very growth of the said places. This act did not extend to bullion or prize goods, nor to filk or filk wares brought by land from Italy to Oftend, Amsterdam, Newport, Kotterdam, Middleburgh, provided the owners and proprietors, being of the English commonwealth, first made oath by themfelves, or other credible witness, that the goods were (s) Scobel's commodities, fold either for money or in barter (s).

collections.

Ludlow tells us, that Mr. St. John was the principal instrument to prevail with the council of state to move the parliament to pass this act (t). If so, his memory (t) Vol. i. ought to be dear to Englishmen; for its utility was fo P. 345. apparent, that, with fome additions and explanations, it had the fanction of the three estates, at a time when (4) Statutes, men's prejudices were at the height against the framers 12 Car. II. of it (u). The greatest possible proof of its excellency. c. 18, 19. and 13. c. Mr. Coke indeed censures this act in the severest terms: he fays, 'it was the second step to the French grandeur by fea; and observes, that the ratio finalis, or end for which laws are made, are usually set down in the preamble of other acts of parliament, whereas there is none in the act of navigation. On the conftrary,' continues he, 'the Rump were so hasty in making this act, defigned in spight to the Dutch, that the title of it is abfurd and impossible; for the title is, · An act for encouraging and increasing of shipping and ' navigation.' It is impossible to encourage any inanimated body, as a rump, stock, stone, dead horse, ass, or fhipping: its true, men may be encouraged to increase shipping and navigation, but then it must be " (I conceive) by one of these ways; either by giving "money or rewards to those who build ships; or, by increasing trade, by which these ships may be better employed: and I do not find that ever the Rump gave one groat to encourage this shipping and navigation.' ----And, after a great deal more against it, he concludes, 'and fure, now its more than time the King and parliament would loofe the nation from the fetters which this act (made in hafte and spight against ' the Dutch, by a company of usurpers and regicides) hath put upon it; not only to our loss, but as much ' to the benefit of the French as well as the Dutch: and · I do fay, that this law has been more injurious to the · English nation, than all the injuries it hath received from the French and Dutch, either in war or peace; onor will it be possible for the nation to repair the (x) Detecloss sustained by it, but by repealing it (x). All this ii. p. 12 is very high! 'tis pleafant, however, to observe, that 29. this author has taken the title of the act as new modelled in the beginning of Charles II's time, to shew what an absurd, stupid race of animals these usurpers and regicides were. Had he read it, as given by the parliament, he would not have exposed himself as he has here done. Sir Josias Child is an authority more to be regarded in matters of commerce than most. His opinioh, therefore, I suppose, will alone be sufficient to fet aside Mr. Coke's censure. 'The act of navigation,' fays he, 'though it have fome things in it wanting (y) Preface s amendment, deserves to be called our (Charta Ma-to his New ' ritima) (y).' And again, ' for my own part, I am of Discourse of opinion, that, in relation to trade, shipping, profit Trade, 12mo, Lond, s and power, it is one of the choicest and most pru- 1593. 4 dent acts that ever was made in England, and without which we had not now been owners of one half

union (QQ) with Scotland, and the settlement of the shipping, nor trade, nor employed one half of

(z) Child on Trade, p. 91.

the feamen which we do at present—(2).

(QQ) The projection of an union with Scotland. I

The parliament of England being desirous, after all these successes, says Ludlow, to convince even their enemies, that their principal design was to procure the happiness and prosperity of all that were under their government, sent commissioners to Scotland to treat concerning an union of that nation with England in one commonwealth; directing them to take care, till that could be effected, that obedience should be given to the authority of the parliament of the commonwealth of England. The commissioners appointed to this end on the part of the parliament, were Sir Henry Vane, the chief justice St. Johns, Mr.
Ferwicke, major Sallowoy, major-general Lambert,
colonel Titchborn, major-general Dean, and colonel Monk. This proposition of union was chearfully

(a) Vol. i. p. 328.

Monk. This proposition of union was chearfully accepted by the most judicious among the Scots, who well understood how great a condescension it was in the parliament of England to permit a people they had conquered to have a part in the legislative ' power (a).'-The same author, in another place, writes as follows: 'The parliament having refolved upon the incorporation of Scotland with the nation of England into one free state or commonwealth. and to reimburse themselves some part of that treafure they had expended in their own defence against the invasions of the Scots, declared the goods and lands, ' formerly belonging to the crown of Scotland, to be confiscated, and also those that were possessed by such e persons as had affisted in the invasion of England by Duke Hamilton, in the year 1648, or had appeared in arms fince, under the King of Scots, in order to in arms fince, under the King of Scots, in order to fubvert the prefent government; excepting those who, fince the battle of Dunbar, had abandoned the said

King of Scots, and, by their merits and services, had ren-

ment of Ireland before-mentioned (both of which rendered themselves worthy of favour. That all such who are not comprehended under the faid qualifications, and shall concur with them in their just enterprize, shall receive the benefit of their protection, and enjoy their liberties and goods equally with the free people of England. In pursuance of this declaration of the parliament, their commissioners in Scotc land published another, wherein they discharge from ' confiscation all merchants and tradesmen, who posfefs not in land or goods above the value of five hundred pounds, and are not prisoners of war, soldiers of fortune, moss troopers, or such as have kile led or committed outrages against the English soldiers contrary to the laws and customs of war. They al-6 fo emitted a proclamation, abolishing, in the name of the parliament, all manner of authority and jurifdiction, derived from any other power but that of the commonwealth of England, as well in Scotland as ' in all the isles belonging to it. After this they funz-6 moned the counties, cities and buroughs, to agree to the incorporation before-mentioned; of which eighteen of one and thirty counties, and twenty-four of fixty-fix cities and boroughs, confented to fend their deputies to the parliament of England, most of the rest excusing themselves for want of money to defray the expences of their representatives (b). Let (b) Vol. i. us now hear Dr. Gumble, who wrote at a time when it p. 401. was no way fashionable, or, perhaps, safe to say much in praise of the commonwealth. The English s pretended commonwealth having reduced the whole e nation of Scotland and Ireland, they having a great calm of peace and tranquility, they fell upon a proe ject (though prastifed by usurpers, and men who had great fears because of their great crimes, and of much care and diligence, because of their future danger to be brought to condign punishment) to unite all the three nations into one government, and to meet in which so much contributed to the welfare

one parliament, a work which they did effect by the present advantages of conquest, and by a pretended consent of some elected deputies: this union being a work which King fames, of bleffed memory, fet on foot, and renewed by our gracious fovereign King " Charles II. (whom God direct to the conclusion) an affair that would as much tend to the peace and publique fecurity of all the three nations, as any other defigne that can be imagined; but these men, like the children of this world, who were more wife in their e generation than the children of light and truth, who were able by their force then upon these conquered countries; for fo they were then in appearance, though, upon unjust grounds, they compelled them to ' fend members to the parliament of England, which onot a little advantaged the traffick of all, which is fince prohibited, but, upon a renewed union, would be confirmed: to gain this point, they published an e act of oblivion, to forget all injuries, and forgive all 6 hostilities; to imitate the subtil estate of Athens, that first gave the precedent. To this end commissioners from the pretended parliament were fent down into Scotland, amongst whom was general Monk (without whose interposing little good was to be done in Scot-land) and though St. John, Vane and Salloway, with others, could talk more, yet none could perswade that nation fo much as he, who (though they looked upon him in the times of hostility as a severe ene-' my) yet they trusted him in this business more than all the rest, and, upon giving them hopes of better days, submitted to the present necessities. Upon the fettling all things there, according to the will and e pleasure of their masters in England, they returned, (c) Life of Monk, p. ' and general Monk with them (c).'-On examina-47. 850. tion of the Journals, and Mr. Whitlock's Memorials, Lond. 1671. who had a great hand in bringing the union with Scotland to a head, it appears that Ludlow's account is, in the

of the English nation) the new modelling

the main, pretty exact (d). However, the parliament had not the honour of finishing this affair. It was re-Journals of served for Cromwell, who, by an act, passed April 12, October 8. 1654, intitled, Scotland made one commonwealth with 26. and 29. England, fully accomplished it. In the preamble of this act the proceedings of the commonwealth are briefly recited, and it is declared, that Scotland and its dependencies shall be incorporated with England, and in every parliament, to be held fuccessively, thirty persons shall be called from, and serve for Scotland. By this act kingship was abolished there; the arms of Scotland were to be borne with the arms of the English common-. wealth; fervitude and vassalage taken away. Superiorities, lordships, and jurisdictions abolished, and the heritors freed from all military fervice, and all forfeitures (e) Scobel's fall to the lord protector for the time being (e). These, collections. with many other things, were enacted, tending to destroy the tyranny and power of the great men in that kingdom, and render the people more easy and happy. Mr. Dalrymple, speaking of the jurisdictions of the Scotch, fays, Cromwell had enough of the monarch to fee how inconsistent these private jurisdictions were, either with the interest of the supream power, or the fafety of the people; but he had too much of the tyrant, to think of making any reparation to the private proprietors, from whom he took their jurifdic- (f) History tions, but to whom he gave nothing in return (f). of Feudal What the wisdom of monarchs has been history will Property, best determine; how much of the tyrant appeared in Lond. 1757. taking away these jurisdictions is not so very certain. That they were inconsistent with the supream power, or the fafety of the people, were reasons abundant for their abolition. For no private interest ought ever to be regarded that stands in competition with these. That he gave nothing to the private proprietors might be, because they merited nothing from his hands. They had, almost all of them, Cavaliers and Presbyterians, opposed

the representation in parliament (RR), of the

the English government; they had invaded the English territories, and put the government to great charges, and were known, most of them, to be still, in their hearts, addicted to the race, from whom, and for whom, they had suffered so much. Could these men then expect any favour, any reward from his hands? That the jurisdictions were in the hands of enemies, and supported their power, had been cause sufficient to wrest these from them. So that, by this learned gentleman's leave, tyranny is not to be imputed to Cromwell on this account, but his policy, and, indeed, humanity, ought to be applanded, who disarmed a set of petty tyrants, and gave freedom to those who had groaned long under vassalage and chains.

(RR) New modelling the representation in parliament.] At what time the commons began to have reprefentatives in parliament is none of my business to enquire. Those who defire information must consult our historians and antiquaries, especially Prynne, and Petyt, men of vast diligence and erudition. Suffice it here to say. that in the time of Henry the third they were possessed of it. The advantages of this representation are well known. The house of commons has frequently afferted the liberties of the nation, framed good laws, brought to punishment bad ministers, and hindered the introduction of despotism, to which some of our princes have been but too much inclined. It has been the aim therefore of these to influence the electors in their choice of members, and to bribe, to flatter, to menace, and terrify them when chosen, from adhering to the interests of their country and constituents. The small boroughs being most easily led by the agents of princes and their ministers, were from time to time privileged with the choice of members, especially if in any good degree dependant on the crown, whereby it came to pass that the majority was generally under court influence, and directed by the will of the fovereign, or his fa-

OLIVER CROMWELL.

the people of the kingdom of England, fo much favourite for the time being. This was an inconvenience which had long been felt, but was almost impossible to be remedied in the common course of things. But when the constitution was broken, when the power of the crown and of the lords was abolished, and there was a necessity for great alteration in the frame of the government, one of the first things that was proposed to the confideration of the parliament of the commonwealth of England was a more equal representative. This was contained in a & Petition from his excellency Thomas Lord Fairfax, and the general councel of officers of the army, to the honourable the commons in parliament affembled, concerning the draught of an agreement of the people for a secure and present peace, by them framed and prepared, prefented Fannary 20, 1649, N.S. The agreement was offered to the confideration of the house first, and then to every man without doors, to subscribe it, to whose judgment it was agreeable. In this they fay- Since our former oppressions, and not yet ended troubles, have been occasioned, either by want of frequent national meetings in councel, or by the undue or unequal constitution thereof, or by rendring these meetings unestectual: we are fully resolved, God willing, to provide, that hereafter our representatives be neither left to an uncertainty for time, nor be unequally constituted; nor made use-' less to the ends for which they are intended. In order whereunto we declare and agree;

on. That to prevent the many inconveniences, apparently arising from the long continuance of the same persons in supream authority, this present parliament end and diffuse upon, or before the last day of April,

6 1649.

'2. That the people of England (being at this day very unequally distributed, by counties, cities, and burroughs, for the election of their representatives) be indifferently proportioned, and to this end, that the much needed and approved, though left unfi-113

representative of the whole nation shall consist of four hundred persons, or not above; and in each county, and the places hereto subjoined, there shall be chosen, to make up the faid representative at all

5 times, the feveral members here mentioned.'- Then follows the number of each county, with the burroughs, towns and parishes therein, except such as were under particularly named.

It is observable that in the scheme for a new reprefentative, the little burroughs were wholly deprived of the liberty of fending members, any otherwise than as they had votes in common for the county, though some of the opulent towns and cities had the priviledges of fending one or more according to the number and riches of the inhabitants. Thus for instance, the county of Cornwall, with the boroughs, towns, and parishes therein, were to fend eight; the county of Deven with the boroughs, towns and parishes were to have twelve, befides Exeter, which were to chuse two, Plymouth two, and Barnstable one. Wilts, including one for Salisbury, eight; the Cinque Ports three, &c. But on the contrary, the county of Middlesex were to chuse four; the city of London eight, the city of Westminster and the dutchy two, besides Southwark, which had two allotted for it likewise. Many rules relating to the choice and regulation of the representative were recommended, as 'That of course it should be chosen every two years;

that no member of any councel of state, nor any officer of any falary, forces in the army, or garrison, on nor any treasurer or receiver of publique moneys,

' shall, while such, be elected to be of a representative; that one hundred and fifty members be always · present at each fitting of the representative at the pasfing of any law, or passing any act, whereby the peo-

· ple are to be bound; that in each interval betwixt biennial representatives, the councel of state (which was to be chosen by parliament, and to continue till

' the

unfinished by them; their attempts to re-

the tenth day after the meeting of the next reprefentative for the management of publique affairs) in case of imminent danger or great necessity, may sum-6 mon a representative to be forthwith chosen and to ' meet; fo as the fession thereof continue not above fourscore days, and so as it dissolve at least fifty days before the appointed time for the next biennial reprefentative. - With regard to the power given to the representative, it was declared that though the fupream trust was to be invested with them for the prefervation and government of the whole, yet many things ought not to be left in their power: particularly preffing men to ferve in war either abroad or at home, unless in the way of training and exercising them in order to repel foreign invations, or quell intestine commotions; invalidating fecurities given or to be eiven on the publique faith; exempting any persons ' from subjection to the laws, or giving judgment on ' any man's person or estate, where no law hath before ' provided.' It was also added, 'That no representative may in any wife render up, or give, or take ' away any the foundations of common right, liberty and fafety contained in the agreement; nor level mens eftates, destroy propriety, or make all things com-6 mon: and that in all matters of fuch fundamental 6 concernment, there shall be a liberty to particular members of the faid representatives to enter their disfents from the major voice.'--With respect to religion, they defired, 'That the christian religion be held forth and recommended as the publick profession in the nation; that publick teachers might be main-' tained by the representatives out of the publick treafury, not by tythes, provided that popery or prelacy be not held forth as the publick way or profession in this nation. It was moreover added, that to the pube lick profession so held forth, none be compelled by e penalties or otherwife; and that such as profess faith

form the abuses of the law, and their enacting

' in God by Jesus Christ, (however differing in judge ment from the doctrine, discipline or worship publicke ly held forth) shall not be restrained from, but shall be protected in the profession of their faith, and exercise of their religion according to their consciences in any place (except the places fet apart for the pub-' lick worship, which without leave they were not to ' make use of) so as they abuse not this liberty to the (g) Petition, civil injury of others, or to the actual disturbance of the publick peace (g).' The officers who presented this petition and agreement were thanked by the Speaker in the name of the house, and told withall that it should be taken into confideration with all convenient speed. It was at the same time ordered by them to be printed. According to their promife, the house fell very seriously to consider this proposal for a new representative. A committee was appointed, May 15 following, for this purpose; and on the 9th of January, 1649, O. S. Sir Henry Vane junior reported from the committee their proceedings, and their votes, as heads, to be the grounds of the debate of the house. These contained the numbers each county were to fend to parliament, formed on the plan in the agreement of the people, though in many inftances differing from it, but yet proportioned in such a mannner as to be apparently for the public (L) See Jour. good, and preferable to what had before been made nal of Jan. 9, use of (h). In consequence of this report, it was re-1649. And folved by the parliament, that the number of perfons, Parliamen that shall he elected for the commonwealth, to fit and tary History, ferve in parliament for this nation, as members thereof; vol. xix. p. shall not exceed four hundred. The committee had refolved also, that the pleasure of the house should be known whether there should be a particular distribution of the faid proportions upon feveral places within each, respective county. And moreover, that the right of electing and fending of members to parliament for ever,

according to the faid proportions respectively be granted

and

don printed for John Partridge, &c. 1649.

245.

and confirmed by act of the then parliament. That in the faid act there be presented the manner how the faid elections shall be made, together with the qualifications of the electors and elected, with fome other heads to strengthen and confirm these new regulations. But only the number to serve in parliament was now determined, and the remainder of the report was referred to a grand committee of the house, to take into consideration the feveral heads reported, according to the number of four hundred; and upon their debate, to prepare a bill, to be presented to the house. Accordingly we find in the journals that on every Wednesday following, till the differences with Scotland broke out into a war, the house in a grand committee fat and debated on this important fubject, and had not entirely finished it, when a period was put to their fitting in the manner we shall soon fee. -It is not to be doubted, had the parliament finished their plan, it would have been truly excellent. As it is, it appears capable of being rendered greatly useful, when-ever a fet of men of wisdom and fortitude shall arise to carry it into execution. That this is not too high an encomium on the parliament's scheme for a new representation, will appear from that part of the instrument of government subscribed by Cromwell, on his affuming the protectorate, relating to the fummoning and electing of parliaments; which I am perfuaded was framed by the grand committee above-mentioned, though the house had not time to pass it into a law. It is too long to be given here, but the curious (i) P. 572. may find it in Whitlock (i), and without doubt will wish It is to be found also in for its revival. The rotten part of the constitution, as other wri-I think Burnet somewhere calls our small boroughs, ters. would then be incapable by their venality and corruption, of doing the mischief they sometimes have done, to themselves, their representatives, and the public.-6-Among the alterations requisite to be made on the " British government, in order to bring it to the most ' perfect model of limited monarchy, says Mr. Hume, the plan of the republican parliament ought to be ' restored by making the representation equal, and by allowing none to vote in the county elections, who U 3

acting all law (ss) proceedings to be in the English

(k) Political Effays, p. 300. 12mo. Edingb.

appears not at all to have entered into the thoughts of the parliament. An estate real or personal of two hundred pounds in value, was the qualification for an elector, in the instrument of government above mentioned.

(ss) Their attempts to reform the law, and enacting all law proceedings to be in the English tongue.] The tedioufnels and expensivenels of law proceedings have long been the subject of complaint, as well as that glorious uncertainty of the law, which has been often boafted of with high-glee by some of its professors. It is not to be doubted but the flow and prolix process of the law fometimes preserves the unwary or unskilful from being furprized, and affords the fairer opportunity to bring truth to light, or give relief to the oppressed: but whether these advantages are not outweighed by the vexation, trouble and expence necessarily incurred thereby, those who have been so unhappy as to be engaged in it, can best determine. As early as the year 1646, the parliament was addressed on this subject, in the following words: 'Yee know, the laws of this nation are ' unworthy a free people, and deserve from first to · last, to be considered, and seriously debated, and reduced to an agreement with common equity, and s right reason, which ought to be the form and life of every government. Magna Charta itself being but a beggarly thing, containing many marks of intollerable bondage, and the laws that have been made fince by parliaments, have in very many particulars made our government much more oppressive and intollerable. The Norman way for ending of controversies, was " much more abusive than the English way, yet the Conqueror, contrary to his oath, introduced the Norman · laws, and his litigious and vexatious way amongst us; the like he did also for punishment of malefactors, 6 controversies of all natures having before a quick

· and

English tongue; their feeking out, employ-

and final dispatch in every hundred. He erected a trade of judges and lawyers, to fell justice and in-' justice at his own unconscionable rate, and in what time he pleased; the corruption whereof is yet ree maining upon us, to our continual impoverishing and ' molestation; from which we thought you should have delivered us .'- In the copy of a very valuable manuscript paper, formerly belonging to colonel Saunders of Derbysbire, colonel of a regiment of horse, written about the end of the year 1647; among many other excellent propofals for the establishment of a firm and present peace, is the following:. ' That the huge volumes of statute laws and ordinances, with the penalties therein imposed, as well corporal as pecuniary, be well revifed; and fuch only left in force, as shall be found fit for the commonwealth, especially that e mens lives be more precious than formerly, and that · lesser punishments than death, and more useful to the ' publick be found out for smaller offences: That all laws, write, commissions, pleadings, and records be in the English tongue; and that proceedings be reduced to a more certain charge, and a more expeditious way than formerly: That no fees at all be exacted of the people in courts of justice; but that the publick · ministers of state be wholly maintained out of the pub-' lick treasury.'- In the petition of the lord general and officers mentioned in the preceeding note, we find among other things noticed, as worthy to be provided for by parliament, 'The removing or reforming of evils or inconveniences in the prefent laws, and ade ministrations thereof, the redresse of abuses, and supbylying of defects therein, the putting of all the laws and proceedings thereof into the English tongue, the ' reducing of the course of law to more brevity and less ^{} Remonstrance of many thousand citizens and other freeborn people of England to their own house of commons, occasioned by the impair nament of John Lilburn, 4to, without name or place.

ing and rewarding the best pens for writing

(/) p. 28.

tleton, fol.

98. 2d. Edit.

charge (1).' These persons seem not to have concurred in judgment with Lord Coke, who tells us, ' The ' law is the perfection of reason;' 'That the law is onothing else but reason; and that if all the reason that is dispersed into so many several heads were united into one, yet could he not make such a law as the c law of England is, because by many succession of ages it hath been fined and refined by an infinite number of grave and learned men, and by long experience grown to such a perfection, for the government of this realm, as the old rule may be truly verified of it, Neminem oportet effe sapientiorem legibus: No man (m) On Lit- ' (out of his own private reason) ought to be wiser than the law, which is the perfection of reason (m). However this may be, the parliament being urged by feeming considerations of public utility, on January 20, 1651, appointed ' A committee to take into confideration what inconveniences were in the law, how the ' mischief that grows from delays, the chargeableness and irregularities in the proceedings of the law may be prevented, and the speediest way to prevent the fame.' No great matters however followed from this committee, by reason of the hurry of the times, and the opposition of the lawyers, who were full of Lord Coke's opinion concerning the perfection of the laws of England, as gentlemen of that profession, for the most part, will always be; for as they then and now fland, they are the means of procuring preferments, titles, and ministerial estates. Can we wonder then they have vindicators, admirers and applauders? - A little before the parliament passed an act, 'That all the books of the · law should be put into English; and that all writs, f process, and returns thereof, and all patents, com-' missions, indiaments, judgments, records, and all rules and proceedings in courts of justice should be in the English tongue. It was moreover enacted, that they should be written in an ordinary, usual and legi-

ing (TT) in behalf of liberty, civil and religious;

ble hand and character, and not in any hand com-monly called court hand.' This act does great honor to the parliament, and is an argument of their good sense, and concern for the welfare of the people. It is amazing so good a law should not have been continued by proper authority after the restoration! But it was generally a sufficient reason then to disuse a thing, though ever fo good in itself, that it had been enacted by an usurped power. Of such fatal confequences are prejudices! But thanks be to God! we have feen the time when this most excellent ordinance has been again revived, and received the fanction of the whole legislature.—It has indeed been questioned, 'Whether a noble dead language, which has fuffered no variation in it for above these thousand years e last past, is not better to preserve records in than so (n) Parliaflux a one as English (n). -- For my own part, I mentary should think not: unless the uncertain good of very History, vol. distant posterity, is to be preferred to our own present real advantage, which I imagine few will fay. - But to go on- 'How much were it to be wished, that a committee of wife and prudent persons were once " more employed to revise, amend and abridge our laws! That we might know ourselves how to act, and not be necessitated to make use of those, who (we are sen-' fible) live on our spoils. -- But much is it to be feared. that our adversaries will be too hard for us, and that we shall be obliged, for a time at least, to submit to ' their yoke. But whenever the spirit of true patriotism shall generally possess the minds of our fenators. I doubt not, but they will apply themselves to our deliverance in good earnest, and bring it to perfection, (0) Histori-' (as it was long ago done in Denmark, and more lately cal and Cri-

in Prussia) inasmuch as the happiness of the commucator of Hugh Pe-

(TT) Their feeking out, and rewarding the best pens, ters, note &c.] There have been few governments destitute of Lond. 1751.

wri-

' nity absolutely depends thereon (o).'

ligious; the application of the large church revewriters to defend and applaud their measures. For, to the difgrace of letters, venal pens in all ages have been in plenty. Hence it has come to pass that panegvrics have been made on the worst measures and administrations, even by men who, in their hearts, despised them. It is no way furprizing therefore that the parliament should have had writers on their fide: their power and wealth would account for this. But that they should have fearched out and found men of real abilities to undertake their cause, and do justice to their actions, must have arose only from their own judgment and liberality. The works of Milton are well known. They are an honor to himself, his cause and his employers.-· The Tenure of Kings and Magistrates,' was written to prove, 'That it is lawful, and hath been held fo through all ages, for any, who have the power, to call to account a tyrant, or wicked King, and after due conviction to depose, and put him to death; if the ordinary magistrate have neglected, or denied to do it.'-In a noble strain it is here said, ' None can love freedom heartily, but good men; the rest love not freedom, but licence; which never hath more scope, or 6 more indulgence than under tyrants.' His Iconoclastes was undertaken in the behalf of liberty and the commonwealth, as was his answer to Salmasius also, by the appointment, as he fays, and not without the approbation of the civil power (p). The parliament rewarded him with a thousand pound for this last performance, and made him their Latin fecretary, by which they obtained a never-dying fame. For his flate letters written in that language, exceed beyond comparison any thing of that kind extant. We are not to wonder therefore that Milton's reputation was high both at (4) Richard- home and abroad; or that he was visited and invited by son's Life of foreign ambassadors at London, not excepting those of crowned heads (q).—He was worthy of the honor. Lond. 1734. For, s as he looked upon true and absolute freedom to be the greatest happiness of this life, whether to focieties or fingle persons, so he thought constraint of any fort to be the utmost misery; for which reason he " used frequently to tell those about him of the intire fatisfaction of his mind, that he had constantly emoployed his strength and faculties in the defence of liberty, and in direct opposition to flavery. And his e aversion to monarchy, as he told his friend Sir Robert Howard, was heightened by this confideration, (r) Life, that the trappings of it might support an ordinary com- by Dr. of monwealth (r). It is afferted on good authority, Birch, p.

(p) Profe Works, F. 599.

revenues taken from the bishops, deans and chap-

That Milton was allowed a weekly table by the par- 74 prefixed to his Profe liament, for the entertainment of foreign ministers, Works, especially such as come from protestant states, and for the learned: which allowance was also continued by " Cromwell . How noble the example. - Marchamont Needham, who had written Mercurius Pragmaticus against the parliament, was not only pardoned by them, but if we may believe Mr. Wood, by promifes of rewards and places, was induced to become an advocate for them and liberty. This was a writer indeed worth gaining. His morals or integrity perhaps were not the most strict, (though I know nothing alledged against him on these heads, except changing his party often) but he had wit, parts, learning, and a flyle beyond most of his age. 'His Mercurius Politicus, which s came out by authority, and flew every week into all oparts of the nation for more than ten years, had very great influence upon numbers of inconfiderable perfons, fuch as have a strong presumption that all must e needs be true that is in print. He was the Goliab of the Philistians, the great champion of the late usure per, whose pen in comparison of others; was like a weavers beam. And certainly he that will, or can ^{} Toland's life of Milton, p. 110, in the note, 8vo. Lond. 2d. edit. N. B. This edition is enriched with most curious and valuable observations in the notes.

chapters, who by act of parliament had heen peruse those his intelligences called Merc. Politici, will judge that had the devil himself (the father of all lies) been in this Goliab's office, he could not have exceeded him. As having with profound malice calumniated his fovereign, scurrility abused the nobility, impudence blasphemed the church and members thereof, and in-(s) Athenæ dustry poisoned the people with dangerous princi-Oxonienses, ples (s). One may easily gather from this character, that Needham with zeal and ability defended the cause of his masters against their adversaries. Besides the quotation given in note (HH), I will add a few more, as the work from whence I take it is not in many hands, and very little known even amongst the curious. In one of his papers he afferts, ' That the original of all just power and government is in the people.' This he proves after the following manner. - As for the government of the Isralites, first under Moses, then Joshua and the judges, the Scriptures plainly 6 shew, that they were extraordinary governors being of God's immediate inflitution, who raifed them up by his spirit, and imposed them upon that people, whose peculiar happiness it was in cases of this nature, to have fo infallible and fure a direction; fo that their government was a Theocrafie (as fome have called it) having God himself for its only original, and therefore no wonder we have in that time and nation fo few visible sootsteps of the peoples election, or of an institution by compact. But yet we find after the iudges, that when this people rejected this more im-6 mediate way of government by God (as the Lord 6 tells Samuel, they have not rejected thee, but me) and defired a government after the manner of other nations, then God feems to forbear the use of his prerogative, 4 and leave them to an exercise of their own natural rights and liberties, to make choice of a new govern-6 ment and governor by fuffrage and compact. The e government they aimed at was kingly. God him-6 felf been abolished, and the wife provision made

626.

e felf was displeased at it, and so was Samuel too, who in hope to continue the old form, and to fright them from the new, tells them what monsters in government Kings would prove, by affuming unto themfelves an arbitrary power (not that a King might lawfully and by right do what Samuel describes (as Salmafius and all the royal interpreters would have us bebut only to shew how far Kings would presume to abuse their power, which no doubt Samuel foresaw, onot only by reason, but by the spirit of prophecy.) Nevertheless the people would have a King; say they, Nay, but there shall be a King over us: whereupon saith God to Samuel, Hearken to their voice: where you plainly see, first God gives the leave to exercise their own natural right, in making choice of their form of government. But then indeed for the choice of their governor, there was one thing extraordinary, in that God appointed them one, he vouchfafing still in an extraordinary and immediate manner to be their director and protector; but yet though God was pleased to nominate the person, he left the confirmation and ratification of the kingship unto the e people, to shew that naturally the right of all was in them, however the exercise of it were superseded at that time by his divine pleasure, as to the point of no-6 mination. For that the people might understand it was their right, Samuel calls them all to Mizpeh, as if the matter were all to be done anew on their part, and there by lot they at length made choice of Saul, and fo immediately proclaim him with shouts and acclamations; and then having had proof of his valour ' against the Ammonites, they met at Gilgal, and proclaim him King once again, to shew (that naturally) the validity of his kingthip depended wholly on the e peoples consent and confirmation, and so you see, the first and most eminent evidence of the institution of • political government in Scripture doth notoriously demonmade for their state clergy and the univerfities: prem

(t) Mercuri-No. 98. p. Z538.

monstrate, that its original is in or from the peous Politicus, ple: (t). In another place, speaking of errors in policy, he fays, The regulation of affairs by reason of fate, not the ftrict rule of honesty, has been an epidemical one. But for fear I be mistaken, continues he, you are to understand, that by reason of state here we do not condemn the equitable refult of prudence and right reason; for upon determinations of this nature depends the fafety of all states and princes; but that reason of flate which flows from a corrupt principle to an indirect end; that reason of state which is the flatesman's reason, or rather his will and lust, when he admits ambition to be a reason, preferment, power, profit, revenge and opportunity to be reasons fufficient to put him upon any design or action that may tend to prefent advantage; though contrary to the law of God, or the law of common honesty, and of nations.—Reason of state is the most sovereign command, and the most important counsellor. fon of state is the card and compass of the ship. Reafon of state is many times the religion of a state; the 'law, the life of a state. That which answers all obe jections and quarrels about mal-government. That which wages war, imposes taxes, cuts off offenders, pardons offenders, fends and treats ambassadors. It s can fay and unfay; do and undo, balk the common road, make high-ways to become by-ways, and the farthest about to become the nearest cut. If a difficult knot come to be untied, which neither the divine by Scripture, nor lawyer by case or precedent can " untie, then reason of state, or an hundred ways more which ideots know not, diffolve it. This is that great empress which the Italians call Raggione di Stato: it can rant as a foldier, compliment as a monfieur, trick it as a juggler, firut it as a statesman, and is as changeable as the moon in the variety of her appearances (u).' This beautiful piece of fatyr will, I prefume.

(a) Id. No. 1c8. p. 16gc.

fume, be acceptable to many of my readers. - I will make but one citation more from this writer, but it contains, I believe, the fentiments of the majority in power at that time on the subject of church government. -- If we feriously reflect, says he, upon the design of God, in bringing Christ into the world, we shall find it was to fet an end to the pompous ad-' ministration of the Jewish form; that as his church and people were formerly confined within the narrow pale of a particular nation, so now the pale should be broken down, and all nations taken into the church. Not all nations in a lump: not any whole nations, or ational bodies to be formed into churches: for his church or people now under the Gospel are not to be a body political, but spiritual and mystical: not a pro-' miscuous confusion of persons taken in at adventure, but an orderly collection, a picking and chusing of fuch as are called and fanctifyed, &c. Not a compaof men forced in by commands and constitutions of worldly power and prudence, but of fuch as are brought in by the power and efficacy of Christ's word and spirit. For he himself hath said, My kingdom is onot from hence; my kingdom is not of this world, • &c. And therefore that hand which hitherto hath prefumed in most nations to erect a power called ecclefiaftick in equipage with the civil to bear fway, and bind mens consciences to certain notions ordained for orthodox, upon civil penalties, under colour of e prudence, good order, discipline, preventing of herefy, and advancing of Christ's kingdom; and to this end hath twisted the spiritual power (as they call it) with the worldly and fecular interest of state; this I fay hath been the right hand of antichrift, opposing 6 Christ in his way, whose kingdom being not of this world, depends not upon the helps and devices of (a) Mercuriworldly wisdom (x). These extracts sufficiently show us Politicus, No. 99. p. how well the cause of liberty, civil and religious, was 1554. understood in these times; how much the parliament had them at heart. For none but men conscious of fair intentions, and upright defigns towards the public, would have favoured the propagation of notions destructive of evil magistrates, and wicked priests, their neversailing coadjutors. - But zealous as these men were for liberty. they were careful to keep their people as much as polfible from popery, and follicitous to hinder their perverfion to that absurd and cruel superstition. A letter to the Spanish ambassador will set this in a clear light. It is as follows: 'The parliament of the commonwealth of England, understanding that several of the people of this city daily refort to the house of your excellency. s and other ambaffadors and public ministers from foreign nations here residing, meerly to hear mass, gave order to the council of state, to let your excellency understand, that whereas such refort is prohibited by the laws of the nation, and of very evil example in this our republic, and extreamly scandalous; that they deem it their duty to take care that no fuch thing be permitted henceforward, and to prohibit all fuch affemblys for the future. Concerning which, 'tis our defire that your excellency should have a fair advertisee ment, to the end that henceforth your excellency may be more careful of admitting any of the people of this republic to hear mass in your house. And as the par-· liament will diligently provide that your excellency's rights and priviledges shall be preserved inviolable, so they perfuade themselves that your excellency, during your abode here, would by no means that the laws of (y) Milton's this republic should be violated by yourself or by your Works, vol. ' attendants (y).' What would the parliament have thought of one hundred thousand Papists in London and Westminster, the number reckoned by persons employed in 1745? Since that time they have much encreased, if reports are to be relied on. In such open defiance of our laws, fays an ingenious writer, has Popery been long making great progress. And whether the threatining consequences are not formidable, may well de-' ferve the confideration of such who are able to discern the inestimable value of our civil and religious liberties. - It would be far from us, after all, to defire any pains or penalties should be inflicted on men, because they have an extravagant ritual, and are fond of worshipping a troop of deities or demons: or for fay-

' ing

ii. p. 199.

ing prayers by tale or number, either to real or imaginary faints: for venerating a wafer or crucifix. Since he who can feast his foul, either on gold, filver, or precious flones, or who can best relish wood, hay, or flubble; should only have our pity, and we ought to wish him a less depraved appetite. But so long as the Papist holds opinions subversive of morality, destructive of fociety, dangerous to the civil and religious rights of mankind, i. e. fo long as the hand of poe pery is against every man, so long every man's hand ' should be against popery. The voice of nature, of felf preservation, is loud in the breast of every pro- (z) Three testant against this superstition (2). The reader will resolved, p. pardon I doubt not this small digression, if indeed it be 30. 8vo. Lond. 1757, one.

I proceed now with the subject. Besides Milton and Needham, the parliament had another writer of some figure on their fide, viz. John Parker, father to Sam. Parker, bishop of Oxon, in the time of James II. This gentleman, . In the year 1650, printed a remarkable book called The government of the people of England precedent and present the same. It was written to fpirit men to subscribe to the engagement to be true and faithful to the commonwealth as then established, without a King or the house of lords: and there he afferts that, Populus suo magistratu prior est tempore natura & dignitate: quia populus magistratum constituit, & quia populus sine magistratu esse potest, sed magistratus s sine populo non potest esse. Also out of another classical author, Vindiciæ contra Tyrannos, he affirms, Reges funt a populo & sun: constituti causa populi. More he undertakes to prove that the Kings of England had no e negative voice rightly and by law, but that it was contrary to the law and their oath at coronation. And then a fortiori, that the lords neither can have any (a) Rehears negative upon the people (a). This book I never fal Transfaw. The writings of Henry Parker on the behalf of 2d. p. 132. the parliament are better known. They are indeed Lond. 1673 worth preferving. Mr. Wood has given us a catalogue 8vo. (b) Athena of them (b).—Andrew Marvel is, I know, commonly 0xon. vol. faid to have been employed, under Milton, by the com- ii. c. p. 222;

fities (uu); I fay if we confider all these things with-monwealth. But I apprehend this to be a mistake, as will appear from his own account. -- As to myfelf; favs he, I never had any, not the remotest relation to bublick matters, nor correspondence with the persons then predominant, until the year 1657. When in-6 deed I entered into an employment, for which I was onot altogether improper, and which I confidered to be the most innocent and inoffensive towards his Majefty's affairs of any in that usurped and irregular government, to which all men were then exposed. And this I accordingly discharged without disobliging any one person (c). -- It must not be forgotten that all these gentlemen found their account in writing for the parliament and Cromwell. Both the Parkers were enriched by lucrative and honourable employs, and Marvel, I suppose, was not unrewarded for the discharge of his office, by the Protector.

(c) Rehearfal tranfprofed, part 3d. p. 127:

(UU) The wife provision made for their state clergy, and the universities.] The clergy, in most countries where christianity prevailed, got wealth, honour and power. Unmindful of their Master's doctrine and example, they loved the world, and the things which were in it, and, by a variety of ways and means, accumulated large possessions. How honestly they got some, how wisely others were bestowed on them by princes, great men, weak women, and perfons, indeed, of all ranks and degrees, from a persuasion instilled into them of attoning for their transgreffions, and getting better things in reversion in lieu of them; I say, how all this happened is well known to most (d). Henry VIII. with consent of parliament, made bold to lay his hand on the lands, tenements, and hereditaments of the abbeys and monasteries, and gave, or fold them, to such as were able to make a better use of them; and his son and fuccessor Edward, as well as his daughter Elizabeth, approved of his proceedings, and availed themselves of his example, by plucking now and then a goodly ma-

(d) See Father Paul on beneficiary matters, Father Simon on ecclefiaflical revenues, and Harry Nevil's Plato Redivivus, p. 98-TOS.

without prejudice, we shall, probably, be forced to acknowledge, that they were born for nor or two from the bishopricks. This (with the power of translations) made the bishops cautious of offending, and follicitous of obtaining the good will of the fove-reign, and his favourites: and they applied themselves with fo much zeal thereunto, that they foon became downright courtiers, supple, complaifant, unmeaning, and ready to put their hand to carry any thing into execution, which they judged agreeable to the crown. So that, for the most part, they were friends to the prerogative, and averse to liberty. For these and other causes, the lords and commons thought proper, by an act of parliament, which had the royal affent, to exclude them from the house of peers; and, by an ordinance of both houses, dated October 9, 1646, their office was abolished, and their lands and possessions settled upon trustees for the use of the commonwealth. The preamble to this ordinance will explain the motives on which it was made. It runs thus: 'For the abolishing of archbishops and bishops, and providing for the payment of the just and necessary debts of the kingdom, into which the same hath been drawn by a war, mainly s promoted by and in favour of the faid archbishops and bishops, and other their adherents and dependants; be it ordained,' &c. (*) Thus the whole of the bishops lands became vested in the parliament, who, by an ordinance, bearing date, Oflober 3, 1648, ordered, the trustees to give warrants to the treasue rers for the iffuing out and paying of the rents and revenues of parfonages impropriate, tythes, oblations, obventions, pensions, portions of tythes, parsonages for legislation, and were worthy of it. But whilst and vicarages, as have been, or shall be received by the faid treasurers, and have not otherwise been disposed of, for the maintenance of ministers, to such e person or persons respectively, to whom the sad rents and revenues have been or shall be ordered or assigned by the committee for plundered ministers, for augmentation of maintenance for officiating in any church or charel in England and Wales.' After the commonwealth took place, the commons of England, in parliament assembled, on the 30th of April, 1649, proceeded farther to pass an act for the abolishing of deans and chapters, canons, prebends, and other officers and titles, of or belonging to any cathedral or col-' legiate church or chapel within England or Wales.' Their plea for this was necessity. ---- Having seriously weighed, fay they, the necessity of raising a present fupply of money for the present safety of this com-monwealth; and finding that their other securities are onot satisfactory to lenders, nor sufficient to raise so considerable a sum as will be necessary for the said fervice, are necessitated to sell the lands of the deans and chapters, for the paying of publick debts, and for the raising of three hundred thousand pounds for the s present supply of the pressing necessities of the com-' monwealth, do enact, &c.'--However, they were not for throwing them away, as much as money was wanting. For none of these lands were to be fold under twelve years purchase, though the lands of the bishops had been allowed to be fold for ten; a tolerable good price, considering the high interest of money, which was at about eight per cent. at this time, and the possibility of their being one time or other reclaimed by their former possessions. Out of these lands thus appointed to be fold, there was excepted, by another act of June the 8th, 1649, 'all tythes appropriate, oblations, obventions, portions of tythes appropriate, of or belonging to the archbishops, bishops, deans, and

^(*) See a collection of feveral acts of parliament, ordinances, &c. for providing maintenance for ministers, heads of colleges, &c. 4to. Lond. 1657. 'Tis from this book I have taken the several citations from the ordinances in this note. See also Scobel's collections, and Kennet's Case of impropriations and augmentation of vicarages, p. 241, and 263. 8vo. Lond. 1704.

whilst the parliament was thus nobly employed deans and chapters, all which, together with twenty thousand pounds yearly rent, formerly belonging to the crown of England, the commons thought fit to be fettled for a competent maintenance of preaching e ministers, where it was wanting, in England and " Wales.' This competent maintenance, in their opinion, was one hundred pounds per annum, which they allotted to the state preachers, without, however, taking away any thing from the rich rectories, which were preserved whole and entire. I suppose there are but few difinterested persons but will think this a much better regulated maintenance than what before had been allotted. If an established clergy be useful and necesfary, and if the public must maintain them, as feems to have been the received opinion, upon whatfoever reafons founded, furely it behoves the legislature to prevent one part of them from rioting in wealth, and the other almost starving through poverty! Complaints, I know, have been made of the scantiness of our ecclesiastical revenues: but how this can be, when fuch a multiplicity of very lucrative preferments are daily heaped on a fingle person, is hard to imagine! A tolerably equitable distribution would, at once, silence every objection on this head, of any reasonable man. - Indeed, fome very fensible persons have been against loading the public with the maintenance of the clergy, on account of several inconveniences attending it. -- Heretofore, fays Milton, in the first evangelic times (and it were happy for Christendom if it were so again) ministers of the Gospel were by nothing else distinguished from other christians, but by their spiritual knowledge and fanctity of life, for which the church elected them to be her teachers and overfeers, though not thereby to separate them from whatever calling she then found them following befides. As the example of St. Paul declares, and the first times of christianity. When once they affected to be called a clergy, and became, X 3

ployed at home and abroad, (for the Dutch war

e as it were, a peculiar tribe of Levites, a party, a difs tinct order in the commonwealth, bred up for divines in babling schools, and fed at the public cost, good for nothing elfe, but what was good for nothing, they foon grew idle; that idleness, with fulness of bread, begat pride and perpetual contention with their feeders, the despised laity, through all ages ever since, to the perverting of religion, and the disturbance of all Christendom. And we may confidently conclude, it will never be otherwise, whilst they are thus upheld undepending on the church, on which alone they antiently depended, and are, by the magistrate, publickly maintained, a numerous faction of indigent persons, crept for the most part out of extream want and bad nurture, claiming, by divine right and freehold, the tenth of our estates, to monopolize the ministry, as their peculiar, which is free and open to all able christians, elected by any church. Under this pretence, exempt from all other employment, and enriching themselves on the public, they last of all prove common incendiaries, and exalt their horns against the magistrate himself that maintains them, as the priest of Rome did soon after against his benefactor the emperor, and the presbyters of late in Scotland. Of which hireling crew, together with all the mifchiefs, diffentions, troubles, wars meerly of their kindling, Christendom might soon rid herself and be happy, if christians would but know their own dignity. their liberty, their adoption, and let it not be wondered, if I fay, their spiritual priesthood, whereby they have all equally access to any ministerial function, whenever called by their own abilities, and the church, though they never came near commencement or university (e).' Mr. Wall, in his fine letter to Milton, dated Caustiam, May 26, 1659, has the following passage. I have fometimes thought (concurring with your affertion of that storied voice that should speak from heaven)

(e) Profe Works, vol. i. p. 636. war was not terminated, though the English.

heaven) when ecclesiastics were endowed with worldby preferments, Hodie venenum infunditur in ecclesiam: for, to use the speech of Genesis iv. ult. according to the fense which it hath in the Hebrew, then began men to corrupt the worship of God. I shall tell you a supposal of mine, which is this: Mr. Dury has beflowed about thirty years time in travel, conference and writings, to reconcile Calvinifts and Lutherans, and that with little or no fuccess. But the shortest way were,—take away ecclefiaftical dignities, ho-nours and preferments, on both fides, and all would foon be hushed; the ecclesiastics would be quiet, and (f) Preface then the people would come forth into truth and liber: to Milton's ty (f). These were the sentiments of some of the Iconoclasses, fons of liberty in the age of which I am now speaking: Lond. 1756. fentiments proceeding from minds full of concern for 4to. truth and virtue, though they had little prospect of being hearkened to by the bulk of mankind, who prefer wealth, pomp and ease to every thing rational, virtuous and manly. The scheme of the parliament pretended not to this high perfection. It only suppress'd the dignity, state and excessive wealth of the lordly ecclefiaftics, whilst it left them enough for every virtuous and laudable purpole, and prevented them from feeling the want of the real necessaries their stations were thought to require. Were I to deliver my own fentiments for the real good of ecclefiaftics of all forts and kinds, I would fay with a late writer concerning the jesuits in particular; 'render them poor, and they will (g) Reflec-be humble; render them poor, and they will be use- tions of a ful; render them poor, and they will become holy (g).' Portuguese But to go on. - Besides the care taken of their paro- wpon the Memorial chial clergy, the parliament shewed their benevolence presented by to the universities, by enacting, 'That the trustees, in the Jesuits whose hands the dean and chapter lands were vested to Clement for the use of the public, shall, from time to time, 152. 8vo. pay (out of the above-mentioned twenty thousand) Lond. 1760. X 4 lish, for the most part, were successful) the lord-

two thousand pounds yearly, for the increase of the maintenance of the masterships of colleges in both universities, where maintenance is wanting, regard F being to be had unto the number of houses of learnfing in each university, that are fit to have an increase f of maintenance, and to make an affignment of maintenance unto them accordingly; provided it do not exceed one hundred pounds per annum to any one of them.'- This bounty was not ill bestowed. For never, perhaps, were there men of more real merit in the university of Cambridge than now. Witness the names of Cudworth, Whichcott, Wilkins, and many others mentioned by the very ingenious Dr. Salter (b), who educated a race of men that were an honour to their coun-Lond. 1753. try; I mean Tilletfon, Barrow, Smith, More, and fuch like, who opposed themselves to popery in the most trying times, and taught men the principles of true religion and virtue. Whether Oxford was quite so happy, I know not; though, 'tis certain, many eminent men were educated there in these times, particularly Mr. Locke, whose writings on toleration and government will be for ever read and admired by men of fense and honesty. What the sum total produced by the sale of the lands of the bishops, deans and chapters, amount, of the Caed to, I cannot fay. But here follows an account thedrals of of the sale of the bishops lands in the province of York, York. &c. as given by Mr. Brown Willis (i). 410. 1727.

(b) Preface to Tuckney's and Whichcott's Letters, Svo. See also note (ccc).

lord-general Cromwell, attended by some soldiers

	1 /.,		Later .	· 1.	5	d.
Sale of the las	nds of the	fee of	York ?	62406	1.10	13
in the year 1650, 1651,			349,5	03/80	1	14
Durham, in th		ears,		68121		9 .
Carlifle,	. 1	•	1 4	6449
Chefter, Man,	•		- 1 5 1	0000
	Total	17	4 : 7	20487	7.	1

From this some tolerable guess may be made of the value of the rest of the bishops lands, which are those of the province of Canterbury, confisting of that archbishopric and twenty one bishoprics. --- A proposal; some years since, by a nameless writer, was made s for (i) The vesting the whole present property of the church in State prese-England and Ireland in the crown, not to enrich or rable to the Church, p. add to its power, but as a trustee for the people, who 12. 8vo. fhould be always uppermost in the consideration of all Lond. 1748. true lovers of their country (j).—Is it effentially f necessary, fays that author, that bishops should have three, four, five, fix, feven, eight, nine and ten thousand pounds a year? Is it necessary that an archbishop should die worth 90,000 l. besides providing very honourably for his family, in confequence of his power and influence? Is it necessary that one 6 churchman shall enjoy a string of benefices, while 5 numbers have none and ftarve? I am willing to fupopose episcopacy to be an essential branch of the christian system; and therefore hold the order in all the veneration due to it. But I cannot bring myself to think that the Holy Ghost delights more to abide with them in coaches and palaces, and in parliament, than if they had abided by the primitive simple way of living, practifed and inculcated by the apostles. I am no less willing that our prelates retain their feats in parliadiers and officers, entered the house, up-

e ment, if it shall be thought that they have been always heretofore inspired with the spirit of truth and righteousness in their legislative capacity. But admitting, as I do very willingly, that our good lords the bishops add a lustre to the upper house, will they fhine the less there for being placed more on the lee vel with each other than they are at present? The poorest of them can afford clean lawn sleeves in their present situation; and if the two metropolitans should be levelled to an annual stipend of 1500 l. each, and their respective suffragans to 1000 l. I don't see but they might keep a coach in parliament time, notwithstanding the duty on carriage wheels, provided they relide with their flocks the rest of the year. Is it necessary that the bishoprics and other churchlivings of Ireland, "a cheap and plentiful country, I should exceed even those in England? or, is it necessary, that, in the north of that kingdom, where there are fearce ten protestants of the episcopal church in a whole parish, many of the incumbents should possess livings of four, fix, and eight hundred pounds a year? It is no uncommon fight in that country, to fee a parson preach, I should say, read prayers, preaching being difuted, to his clerk, and fuch of his own family as had accompanied him from the parsonage house in his coach and four. Though the value of bivings in that kingdom be well known to our clergy, who are never wanting to themselves in pushing their way thither, where they baskin plenty and ease, it would feem as if our statesmen had acquired none or very little knowledge of the treasure that might be raised there by fale of the present possessions of the church. ' To mention but the primacy there, lately conferred on a very young churchman, but, I suppose, of diftinguished piety and erudition, it would fell, at twenty years purchase only, for above 200,000 l. no contemptible aid to a bleeding country, obliged to raise above 6 ten braided the members, turned the speaker

ten millions annually, though already above four-score in debt. From this specimen may be seen how greatby the trading and industrious part of the people, that is, the laity, might be eased, if the revenues of the church, tithes and all, were put to fale, and the purchase money applied to the uses of the public. And, furely, in a time of fuch danger and difficulty as the prefent, no good subject can warrant opposing the carrying so salutary a scheme into execution. probable our open foreign, and native fecret enemies ' might oppose such a healing scheme; but except the French and Spaniards abroad, and our popish fellowfubjects at home, I cannot persuade myself that it would meet with the least opposition. Our protestant e laity would unanimously assent to it; and as for the clergy, if their fuffrages were taken collectively, I will answer for it, the majority would be with (k) The me (k). Possibly this writer would have found him. State, &c. felf mistaken; for, as there are but few of the inferior P. 14. clergy void of hope, founded on their belief of their own merit, of preferment, these would not be overfond of the scheme: and as for the dignified ones, they would naturally, one and all, cry out against it, as a breach of the alliance between church and state, which they would fain perfuade us is productive of many happy consequences to society. The ignorant laity, for any thing I know to the contrary, might be pleased with the carrying such a scheme into execution. After this brief detail of the great actions of the parliament at home and abroad, it is not to be admired that they met with the applause of the ablest and best judges. To what the reader will find in the note (NN) it will be proper to add the opinion of the old chancellor Oxenfliern of Sweden, a name of the highest renown for political abilities in the age in which he lived, the fame, whose affairs we are now treating of. It is mentioned from M. Chanut, both in the appendix to Keysler's Travels.

out of the chair (ww), and put an end, for the present, to the supream authority of the

vels, and in Basnage's Annals of the United Provinces. Oxenstiern indeed blamed the extream barbarity committed on the person of the late King of England, but commended and admired almost every part of the plan of that great defign which the parliament had formed.' Bajnage adds, 'that he said, it had been conducted with diffinguished prudence, and that those who then governed in England, acted upon such f principles of policy as were founded in truth and experience *.' Such readers as are unprejudiced, will not, after this, think, I am perfuaded, that Mr. Hume has done justice to the parliament in the following character: 'These men, says he, had not that large thought, nor comprehensive views, which might qualify them for acting the part of legislators; selfish aims and bigotry chiefly engrossed their attention. (1) History They carried their rigid austerity fo far as to enact of Great. I laws, declaring fornication, after the first act, to be felony, without benefit of clergy (1). Is this a likeness? Let facts determine. Undoubtedly their law, with respect to fornication, was much too rigid. But, from a fingle instance, to take a character, is hardly allowable. To be able to see only one disagreeable object amongst several more fair and equally obvious, argues, indeed, to use this gentleman's own expressions, no large thought or comprehensive views. -If ever men were qualified for acting the part of legiflators, these were they .---- And whoever will excel as fuch, must copy after them in the main of their conduct. (ww) Cromwell entered the house, and put a period, for a time, to the commonwealth.] 'Many republicks,' favs an excellent writer, have, with length of time, Britain, vol. ii. p. 32. Compare this with Ludiow, vol. ii. p. 453. and the quetation from Warburton in the note (xx).

[·] See Ifaiah Puffendorf's Observations on the Resolution of the last Swedish diet, &c. in the Appendix to Keysler's Travels, vol. iv. p. 51. and Bainage's Annals of the United-Previnces, vol. i. p. 241.

the commonwealth of England. It is not to fallen back into despotick governments. This seems to be a calamity that inevitably happens to every free government sooner or later. And, indeed, how can it perpetually refift every thing that faps and funplants? How can it always check the ambition of those great men whom it produces, and harbours in its bosom? How can it always watch against the dark and fecret practices and machinations of its neighbours, or against the corruption of its own menibers, while interest prevails in the world over every other motive? How should it expect always to come off with fuccess in the wars it must needs undertake and support for its security? or prevent those dangerous conjunctures, those critical and decisive moments, when its liberty is at flake, or those unforeseen accidents that animate and favour the wicked and audacious? If any armies are commanded by timid and unskilful generals, it falls a prey to any enemies; if they are headed by bold and successful commanders, these will be as dangerous in times of peace, as they ' were useful and beneficial during the war. There ' are few, if any republicks, but have rifen from the abysi of tyranny to freedom, and from thence have funk again into the dregs of fervitude. The fame Athenians, who, in the times of Demosthenes, provoked and infulted Philip of Macedon, crouched to Alexander. The Romans, who abhorred royalty, and expelled their kings, suffered, some ages after, the most horrible oppression and cruelties from their emperors. And the same Englishmen who rebelled against, imprisoned, and beheaded Charles I. submissively bore (m) Antithe galling yoke of a protector (m).' I have already Machiavel, observed that the victory at Worcester, so satal to the P. 97. 8vo. Lond. 1742. affairs of Charles II. probably inspired Cromwell with the ambition of lording it over his masters, and seizing the fovereignty. Flushed with success the brave and ambitious aspire higher and higher, and dare adventure

to be wondered that this action was looked upon on the boldest things. Hence the danger of continuing a general long in supream command, in free states. Immediately after this important event, Cromwell feemed determined to give the law. He used, however, great precaution. Though he had all possible honours paid him by the parliament and the city of London, yet he carried himself with much affability and seeming humility, and in all his discourses about the business of " Worcester, would seldom mention any thing of himfelf, but of the gallantry of the officers and foldiers, and gave (as was due) all the glory of the action un-' to God (n).'—But, if we may believe Ludlow, this was meer affectation. He was, in reality, 'so much elevated with that success, that Mr. Hugh Peters, as he since told me, took so much notice of it, as to fay in confidence to a friend upon the road, in his return from Worcefler, that Cromwell would make him-(0) Vol. ii. 6 felf king (0).' Indeed, very foon after his return to London, ' he defired a meeting with divers members of e parliament, and fome chief officers of the army, at the speaker's house; and a great many being there, he proposed to them, that now the old King being dead, and his fon being defeated, he held it necessary to come to a fettlement of the nation. And, in order thereunto, he had requested this meeting, that they together might confider and advise what was fit to be done. and to be presented to the parliament.' The questions at this meeting were, in what way this settlement was defired, whether of an absolute republick, or with' any mixture of monarchy? and, if the latter, in whom that power should be placed? ____ In this conference the lawvers were generally for a mix'd monarchical ' government, and many were for the Duke of Glouecifter to be made King; but Cromwell still put off that debate, and came off to some other point; and, in " conclusion, after a long debate, the company parted without coming to any refult at all, only Cromwell

· dif-

(n) Whitlock, p. 5: 9.

P. 447.

upon by the friends of the parliament as discovered by this meeting the inclinations of the perfons that spake, for which he fished, and made use of what he then discerned (p). In November, 1652, (p) Whit-Cromweil met Whitlock in St. James's Park, and entered lock, p. 516. into a conference with him concerning the dangerous condition they were then in, and how to make good their station, as he expressed it. --- After taking notice of the factions and murmurings of the army, their diftaste against the parliament, whose actions he greatly censured, as well as many of their persons, and the impossibility of keeping them within the bounds of justice, law, or reason, as they were the supream power of the nation, and liable to no account or controul; he added, that, unless there be some authority and power 6 fo full and high, as to restrain and keep things in better order, and that may be a check to these exorbitances, it will be impossible in human reason to pre-' vent our ruin.' Whitlack spoke in vindication of the parliament, as much, I suppose, as he thought he might do with fafety, and Oliver resting unfatisfied, he said, We ourselves have acknowledged them the supream power, and taken our commissions and authority in the highest concernments from them, and how to re-' strain and curb them after this, it will be hard to find out a way for it.' Hereupon Cromwell plainly asked, What if a man should take upon him to be a king?" One may, I think, fairly conclude from hence, that he had, for some time, thought of such a thing, and was determined to be master. Whitlack gave him honestly his advice against carrying such a project into execution, and proposed his treating with the King of Scots as the furest means to provide for his own and the nation's safety. Cromwell was not well pleased with the expedient, as Whitlick judged from his countenance and carriage, and therefore broke off, and went to other company (q). Possibly he was not wrong in rejecting the (q) Id. p. propolal. The next month the scene began to open. 548. ' The base and ingrateful, though Oliver attempted

The parliament were very bufy in debate of feveral acts of parliament under confideration, but very little being brought to effect by them, the foldiers grumbled at their delays, and there began to be ill blood between them; the general and his officers pressed the putting a period to their fitting, which they pro-" mised to do, but were slow in that tusiness (r)." And bek, p. 551. Cremwell, with the other grandees, now began to affume to themselves all the honour of the past actions, and of the conquests by them atchieved; scarce owning the parliament and their affiftance and provision for them; but taxing and censuring the members of e parliament for injustice, and delay of business, and for feeking to prolong their power, and promote their private interest, and to satisfy their own ambition. these and many others the like censures (continues my author) they endeavoured to calumniate the parliament, and judge them guilty of those crimes whereof themselves were faulty, not looking into their own actions, nor perceiving their own defaults; yet cenfuring the actions and proceedings of the perliament very opprobriously. The drift of Cromwell and his officers was to put an end to this parliament, which many wondered at, and fought to diffuade him from it upon all opportunities as far as it was thought conve-' nient, and that they might not appear defirous to continue their own power, and fitting in parliament, whereof they had cause to be sufficiently weary. Neither could it be clearly foreseen, that their design was to rout the present power, and to set up themselves; against the which they were advised, as pulling down the foundation of their own interest and power, and the way to weaken themselves, and hazard both their cause and persons. Yet still they seemed zealous upon their common pretences of right and justice and publick liberty, to put a period to this parliament, and that, if the parliament would not shortly do it them-

71 Whit-

felves, that then the foldiers must do it (s). Ac- (s) Whitcordingly, on the 20th of April, 1653, the parliament lock, p. 552. not having put a period to themselves immediately, as Cromwell had defired, he was so enraged thereat, ' that he commanded some of the officers of the army to fetch a party of foldiers, with whom he marched to the house, and led a file of musqueteers in with him; the rest he placed at the door of the house; and in the lobby before it. In this manner entering the house, he, in a furious manner, bid the speaker leave his chair; told the house, that they had fat long enough, unless they had done more good; that some of them were where-masters, looking then towards Mr. Henry Martyn and Sir Peter Wentworth. That others of them were drunkards; and fonie corrupt and unjust men, and fcandalous to the profession of the Gospel, and that it was not fit they fhould fit as a parliament any conger, and defired them to go away. The speaker onot flirring from his feat, colonel Harrifor, who fat e near the chair, rose up and took him by the arm to remove him from his feat, which, when the speaker faw, he left the chair. Some of the members rose up to answer Cromwell's speech, but he would suffer onone to fpeak but himfelf, which he did with so much arrogance in himself, and reproach to his fellowmembers, that some of his privadoes were ashamed of it; but he and his officers and party would have it fo: and, among all the parliament men, of whom many wore fwords, and would fometimes brag high, one man offered to draw his sword against Cromwell, or to make the least refistance against him; but all of them tamely departed the house. He bid one of the foldiers to take away that fool's bauble, the mace; and staid himself to see all the members out of the house, himself the last of them, and then caused the doors of the house to be shut up. was this great parliament, which had done fo great things, wholly at this time routed by those whom they had fet up, and that took their commissions and authority from them; nor could they, in the least, s justify any action they had done, or one drop of · blood blood they had spilt, but by this authority. Yet onow the fervants rose against the masters, and most ingratefully, and difingenuously, as well as rashly and imprudently, they dissolved that power by which themfelves were created officers and foldiers; and now they took what they defigned, all power into their own hands. All honest and prudent indifferent men were highly distasted at this unworthy action. Thus it e pleased God, that this assembly, famous through the world for its undertakings, actions and successes, having subdued all their enemies, were themselves overthrown and ruined by their fervants; and those whom they had raised, now pulled down their masters. An example never to be forgotten, and scarce to be paralleled in any flory, by which all persons may be instructed how uncertain and subject to change all worldly affairs are, how apt to fall when we think them highest (t).' To the above account from Mr. Whitlock, who is univerfally allowed to write impartially, we must add that Cromwell, having interrupted the parliament in the morning, came in the after-' noon to the council of state (who were assembled to 6 do their duty at the usual place) accompanied with e major-general Lambert and colonel Harrison, and told them at his entrance, Gentlemen, if you are met here as private persons, you shall not be disturbed; but if as a council of state, this is no place for you; and fince you can't but know what was done at the house in the morning, so take notice, that the parliament is dissolved. To this serieant Bradshaw answered; Sir, we have heard what you did at the house in the morning, and before many hours all England will hear it: but, Sir, you are mistaken to think that the parliament is dissolved; for no power under heaven can dissolve them but themselves; therefore take you notice of that. Something more was faid to the same purpose by Sir Arthur Haselrig, Mr. Love, and Mr. Scot; and then the council of state, e perceiving themselves to be under the same violence, (u) Ludlow, departed (u).'——There is no account of this remarkable day's transactions in the Journals. There was an entry of some kind or other made, but it was expunged by order of parliament, January 7th, 1659. In Mercurius Politicus, which was published by authority at that time, there is an article, dated Westminster, April 20, in the following words: 'The lord general delivered in parliament divers reasons wherefore a prefent period should be put to the sitting of this parliament; and it was accordingly done; the speaker and the members all departing. The grounds of which ' proceedings will (its probable) be shortly made publick.' Writers of Gazettes in all ages and countries are pretty much the same.——If the reader will turn to Mr. Hume, he may see this story of the dissolution of Great of the parliament highly embellished (x). It may well Britain, vol. enough be thought a transaction of this nature must ii. p. 44. have been variously censured. The common people, delighted with change, were far enough from being difpleased; the Cavaliers and the other Royalists with pleasure saw those men displaced from that power they judged they had no right to assume; the Dutch were in hopes of obtaining peace on better terms than those fleady and resolute men ever would willingly have given them; whilst the true Republicans could not help crying out on Cromwell, who had interrupted the parliament in their career of glory. Mr. Whitlock's censure we have just seen. Another author thus exclaims against him. -- 'His falseness and ingratitude, fays he, appeared superlatively in turning out his masters, who had not only advanced him, but made themselves " more odious by their partial affection towards him, and in his doing it with the breach of a positive nee gative oath, taken once a year, when made a counfellor of state, besides the breach of all other en-' gagements, voluntary imprecations, protestations and oaths, taken frequently upon all occasions in difcourse and declarations; and yet further (when he had turned them out, and left them void of pro- Werld's tection, and exposed them to the fury of the peop'e) mistake in in pursuing them with false reproachful declarations, Oliver chough to have stirred up the rude multitude to have Cromwell, descreyed them, wherever they had met them (y). Lond, 166%, to justify it, as well as his apologists (xx). The grounds and reasons of this proceeding being

(t) Whitlock, p. 554. and Ludlow, vol. ii. p. 455.

v.l. ii. p.

Mr. Lud'ow talks much in the same strain. Cremwell's

(xx) Oliver attempted to justify it, as well as his apo-

defence will be found in the following note.

logists.] On the twenty second of April, two days after the interruption or dissolution of the parliament, a declaration was published in the name of the lord-general and his council of officers, shewing the grounds and reasons thereof. In this the neglect of the parliament, in fettling a due liberty in reference both to civil and fpiritual things, is lamented, and a defire of perpetuating themselves in the supream government afferted. For which purpose,' says the general and his officers, the corrupt party [the majority] long opposed, and frequently declared themselves against having a new e representative: and when they faw themselves necesfitated to take that bill into confideration, they refolved to make use of it to recruit the house with e persons of the same spirit and temper: and the better to effect this, divers petitions preparing from feveral counties for the continuance of this parliament were encouraged, if not fet on foot by many of them.'-They go on to fay, 'That, having a meeting with about twenty members of parliament, they laid before them ' their judgment, that the fupream authority should be by the parliament devolved upon known perfons, ' men fearing God, and of approved integrity, and the government of the commonwealth committed unto them for a time, as the most hopeful way to encou-' rage and countenance all God's people, reform the ' law, and administer justice impartially.' This, it feems, found no acceptance: but, instead thereof, cit was offered, that the way was to continue still this present parliament, as being that from which we might reasonably expect all good things. And this being vehemently inlifted upon, did much confirm us in our apprehensions, that not any love to a repre-' sentative,

ing published, they were approved by the fentative, but the making use thereof to recruit, and fo perpetuate themselves, was their aim. They being plainly dealt with about this, and told, that neither the nation, the honest interest, nor we ourselves, would be deluded by fuch dealings, they did agree to meet again the next day in the afternoon for mutual fatisfaction, it being confented to by the members f present, that endeavours should be used, that nothing in the mean time should be done in parliament that 6 might exclude or frustrate the proposals above mentioned. Notwithstanding this, the next morning the parliament did make more hafte than utual, in carrying on their faid act, being helped on therein by some of the persons engaged to us the night before; none of them which were then present endeavouring to opopose the same: and being ready to put the main question for consummating the said act, whereby our aforesaid proposals would have been rendered void, and the way of bringing them into a fair and full debate in parliament obstructed; for preventing whereof, and all the fad and evil confequences, which must, upon the grounds aforesaid, have ensued, and whereby, at one blow, the interest of all honest 6 men, and of this glorious cause, had been in danger to be laid in the dust, and these nations embroiled in new troubles, at a time when our enemies abroad are watching all advantages against us, and some of them actually engaged in a war with us: we have been necessitated, though with much reluctancy, to put an end to this parliament; which yet we have done (we hope) out of an honest heart, preferring this cause above our names, lives, families, or interests, how dear soever; with clear intentions and real purposes of heart, to call to the government persons of approved fidelity and honest, believing, that as none wife will expect to gather grapes of thorns, fo good men will hope, that, if persons so cualified be chief officers in the fleet and army, and chosen, the fruits of a just and righteous reformation, so long prayed and wished for, will, by the

(z) Declaration of the c Lord General, &c. Londen O pr'n'ed by Henry Hills and Thomas O Bewster, a printers to the army. 4to. 1653.

bleffing of God, be in due time obtained, to the refreshing of all those good hearts who have been panting after those things (z).'-Mr. Maidston, steward of the household to Cromwell, a member of his parliaments, and well acquainted with his actions, speaking of his return to London from the victory at Worcester, adds, ' He had not long continued here, before it was flrongly imprest upon him by those, to whom he had no reason to be unterly incredulous, and strengthned by his own observation, that the persons then called the parliament of the commonwealth of England, as from whom he had derived his authority, and by virtue whereof he had fought fo many holy men in Scot-' land into their graves, were not fuch as were spirited to carry the good interest to an end, wherein he and they had jeoparded all that was of concern to them in this world; and I wish cordially, that there had onot been too great a ground for those allegations. The refult of them, after many debates betwixt the members then fitting, and the general, with fome who ' joined with him, was the diffolution of that parliament by a military force fince called by a foster word, interruption (a).'—These were the pleas in the defence of the diffolution by those who had accomplished Since this others have taken up the argument, and in behalf of Cromwell observe, 'That the presbyte-' rian party being expelled the house, the small re-6 mainder was only a junto, which derived their authofrity from the power of the fword; their votes and ' acts were no farther laws than the fword constrained 6 obedience to them; they were only continued in their feats by Cromwell for a prefent convenience; and therefore as they were only countenanced and supported by the power of the sword, which was then in the hands of Cromwell, they were to be looked upon as no

(a) Therloe, vol. i. p. 765. the general thereupon proceeded to nominate other than a party fet up by him, and owing their authority to him. So that when they began to extend that authority beyond its limits, and assumed to them-' selves a democratical power in opposition to him from whom they derived their subsistence, they were rather rebels to Cromwell, than Cromwell to them; and as he fet them up in hopes that they might be ferviceable to him for the good of the nation, might pull them down again, when he faw them exceeding their commission. Now whether the design for the bringing of which to pass, Cromwell fixed them in their feats pro "tempore, were good or bad, is not the question : but whether they who were no lawful authority, but only acted under the fafeguard of another unlawful autho-' rity, had power to make any act good or evil, as it fuited with their interest, or opposed their designs. For if they had not, which is most probable, Cromwell is never a jot the more impious, the more per-' jured, the more villain, because they call him so. ' For being a junto of his own erecting, upon fuch and fuch confiderations, he might without any fear of those reproaches, fend them a grazing when he found them deviating from those ends for which he had suffered (b) Modest ' them to keep their places (b).'---Mr. Rapin is an Vindication advocate on the fame fide of the question. The re- of Oliver publicans, fays he, were enraged against Cromwell, p. 49. and deemed him the most perfidious of men. onot very strange, since he had wrested from that par-' liament the fovereign power, feized by these repub-6 licans without any lawful authority. But what was this parliament? It was an affembly of independents, anabaptists, fanaticks, enthusialts, and others of no religion, who under colour of establishing a free commonwealth, held the nation in servitude; who, to ' confirm their own authority, had treated their fellow f members with unheard of violence, and dared to embrue their hands in the blocd of the late King, nate a new council of state, and to call a par-

at a time when he had almost granted every thing 5 that was defired; who, in short, were industrious to break the union of the church, to subvert all religion, or introduce the most ridiculous and extravagant one.

(c) History of England, vol. ii. p. 601. Fol.

Was it therefore more eligible for England to be go-' verned by these men, than by a Cromwell (c)?' . These things are all eafily spoken. But whoever will consider, Lond. 1733. that Cremwell in this affair was deftitute of the plea of necessity and self-preservation; that he had received very great favours from, and had actually sworn to be true and faithful to the commonwealth, that he had approved of their actions, and zealously concurred with them in the most exceptionable of them; that he charges them not with the ill things done, but only fome good things omitted, a charge to which every government on earth is, and always will be liable: I fay, whoever confiders these things, and withal calls to mind that they were about to pass an act for their own dissolution, and for (d) Journal, the calling and fettling of future and fuccessive parliaments (d), even at the time Comwell used this force, will, I am perfuaded, not be over hafty in his justification. Of this however the confiderate and unpreju-

Ap. 13. 16:3.

diced reader must be the judge.

Mr. Harrington, after centuring the form of government of the commonwealth, 'as an oligarchy,' because it was a ' council without a ballance,' or as he before expresses it, ' A parliament consisting of a single affembly elected by the people, and invested with the ' whole' power of the government, without any coves nants, conditions or orders whatfoever:' I fay, after thus censuring the form of that government, proceeds to take notice of its dissolution by Cromwell in the following terms: 4 I come now to the army, fays he, of ' which the most victorious captain and incomparable ' patriot Olphaus Megaleter was now general: who being a much greater master of that art, whereof I have ' made a rough draught in these preliminaries, had so parliament. This was furnamed the Little, or fad reflections upon the ways and proceedings of the s parliament, as cast him upon books, and all other means of diversion, among which he happened upon this place of Machiavel: Thrice happy is that peof ple which chances to have a man able to give them " fuch a government at once, as without alteration may fecure them of their liberties; feeing it is certain, that Lacedemon, in observing the laws of Lycurgus, contif nued about eight hundred years without any danges rous turnult or corruption. My lord general (as it is faid of Themistocles, that he could not sleep for the glory obtained by Miltiades at the battle of Mara: ho) took so new and deep impression at these words of the 5 much greater glory of Lycurgus, that being on this fide f affaulted with the emulation of his illustrious object, on the other with the mifery of the nation, which feemed (as it were ruined by his victory) to cast herfelf at his feet, he was almost wholly deprived of his natural rest, until the debate he had within himself came to a firm refolution, that the greatest advantages f of a commonwealth are, first, that the legislator should be one man: and fecondly, that the government fhould be made altogether, or at once. For the first, it is certain, faith Machiavel, that a commonwealth is feldom or never well turned or constituted, except it have been the work of one man: for which cause a wife legislator, and one whose mind is firmly fet, not upon private but the publick interest, not upon his opofterity but upon his country, may justly endeavour to get the fovereign power into his own hands; nor fhall any man who is mafter of reason, blame such extraordinary means as in that case shall be necessary, the end proving no other, than the constitution of a well ordered commonwealth. The reason of this is demonstrable; for the ordinary means not failing, the commonwealth hath no need of a legislator; but the ordinary means failing, there is no recourse to be had

or Praisegod Barebone's parliament (YY),

(e) Commonwealth of Oceana, p. 49. Fol. Lond. 1656.

' but to fuch as are extraordinary (e).' This was written, I suppose, to stimulate Cromwell's ambition, and excite him by the defire of real glory to establish a perfect commonwealth, and to ' launch immediately forth ' into an empire of laws.' But he had no such intention as this, and therefore cannot be entitled to this vindication. To come to a conclusion-W hatever crime the general was guilty of in this affair, it certainly was a proof of his superior ability. For, as Dr. Warburton observes, ' Cromwell seemeth to be distinguished in the most eminent manner, with regard to his abilities, from all other great and wicked men, who have overturned the liberties of their country. The times in which others succeeded in this attempt, were such as faw the spirit of liberty suppressed and stifled by a

e general luxury and venality: but Cromwell subdued his country, when this spirit was at its height, by a

(f) Notes on Pope's Effay on Man, in his iii. p. 89.

Lond. Svo. 1751.

' fuccessful struggle against court-oppression; and while it was conducted and supported by a set of the greatest geniuses for government the world ever saw (f). What an idea is here given of the capacity of this ex-Works, vol. traordinary man! What an eulogium on his masters whom he displaced, and ruled over! (YY) He constituted a council of state, and summoned

Barebone's parliament. The parliament being dissolved by Cromwell, no visible power was in being, but the foldiery. This must have been an alarming consideration. To prevent the ill effects of it, a declaration was fet forth in the general's name in the following words: Whereas the parliament being dissolved, persons of approved fidelity and honesty, are (according to the ' late declaration of the 22d of April last) to be called from the feveral parts of this commonwealth to the fupream authority; and although effectual proceedings are and have been had for perfecting these resolutions; vet fome convenient time being required for the affembling of those persons, it hath been sound neces-

the subject of ridicule, reproach and censure, from fary for preventing the faid mischiefs and inconvenien-4 ces which may arise in the mean-while to the pub-· lick affairs, that a councel of state be constituted, to take care of, and intend the peace, fafety and present ' management of the affairs of this commonwealth: which being fettled accordingly, the fame is hereby declared and published, to the end all persons may take notice thereof, and in their feveral places and flations demean themselves peaceably; giving obedience to the laws of the nation as heretofore; in the exercise and administration whereof, as endeavours fhall be used, that no oppression or wrong be done to the people, so a strict account will be required of all fuch as shall do any thing to endanger the publick (g) Mercu-' peace and quiet upon any pretence whatsoever (g).' rius Politi-This bears date April 30, 1653. In this high tone 151. p. spoke Gromwell, who now, having all power in his 2410. hands, printed an order for the continuance of the af- (b) Id. No. fellment for the payment of the army and the navy for 157. Pa fix months (b), after the rate of one hundred and twent 2506. ty thousand pounds a month, and issued out warrants for feveral persons to appear at Whitehall, and receive from him the supream power. In the Journal of the house of commons, July 4th, 1653, we have the following account of the calling this affembly. -- Several letters having iffued, under the hand and feal of the lord general, directed unto divers persons, in this form; Forasmuch as, upon the dissolution of the late parliament, it became necessary that the peace, safety, and good government of this commonwealth should be provided for; in order whereunto, divers persons, fearing God, and of approved fidelity and honesty, are by myself, with the advice of my council of officers, nominated; to whom the great charge and truft of fo weighty affairs is to be committed; and having e good assurance of the love to, and courage for God, and interest for his cause, and of the good people of

from men who knew little of its real character,

this commonwealth: I, Oliver Gromwell, captain-general and commander in chief of all the armies and forces raised, and to be raised in this commonwealth,

forces rated, and to be rated in this commonwealth,
do hereby fummon and require you

(being one of the faid persons nominated) personally to be and appear at the council-chamber in Whitehall, within the city of Westminster, upon the fourth day of fuly next ensuing the date hereof, then and there to take upon you the said trust, unto which you are hereby called and appointed, to serve as a member for the county of
and hereof you are not to sail. Given under my hand and seal the sixth day of Tune, 1653.

O. CROMWELL.

4. This day there was a great appearance of those perfons (to whom the letters were directed) in the council-chamber at Whitehall; when the lord-general declared unto them the grounds and end of calling them; and delivered unto them an instrument, in writing under his hand and feal; and afterwards left them.' In the Mercurius Politicus there is an article from Whitehall of the same date, in which it is said, ' That the gentlemen that were called to the supream authority, met, to the number of above one hundred and twenty, in the council-chamber, and being fet round about the table, the lord-general standing by the window oppofite to the middle of the table, and having as many of the army officers as the room could well contain, on his right hand and on his left; his lordship made a very grave, christian and reasonable speech, and exhortation to them; wherein he briefly recounted the ' many great and wondrous mercies of God towards this nation; he fet forth also the progress of af-' fairs fince the famous victory at Worcester, wherein that arch-enemy of this nation was wholly subdued. · He likewise laid down the actings of the army thereracter, or cared not what they faid about upon, together with the grounds and necessity of their diffolving the parliament, which his excellency declared to be for the preservation of this cause, and the interest of all honest men who have been ingaged therein. Moreover he very amply held forth the clearness of the call given to the present members, to take upon them the supream authority; and did from the Scriptures exhort them to their duties, and encourage them therein; desiring that a tenderness might be used towards all godly and conscientious persons, of what iudgment, or under what form foever. Which being ended, his lordship produced an instrument under his own hand and feal, whereby he did, with the advice of his officers, devolve and intrust the supream authority and government of this commonwealth, into the hands of the persons then met, who, or any forty of them, are to be held and acknowledged the supream authority of the nation; unto whom all persons within the fame, and the territories thereunto belonging, are to e yield obedience and fubjection. And they are not to fit longer than the third of November, 1654. Three 6 months before their diffolution, they are to make choice of other persons to succeed them, who are not to fit longer than a twelvemonth, but it is left to them to take care for a fuccession in government. Which instrument being delivered to the persons aforefaid, his lordship commended them to the grace of (i) Mercuri-God (i). Mr. Rous was called to the chair in us Politicus, this affembly, and it was ' Refolved that some members 2563. And of the house should be sent to the lord-general to desire Thurloe, him to afford his presence and affistance in the house, as vol. i. p. a member thereof; viz. Sir Anthony Ashley Cooper, Sir Gilbert Pickering, Mr. Strickland, Colonel Sidenham, Mr. Mayer, Mr. Carew, Colonel Bennet, Colonel Jones. And the question being propounded, that Major-General Lambert, Major-General Harrison, Major-General Desbarow, and Colonel Thomling, n, be, and are hereby,

it. But they foon refigned the power back called to fit as members of this house; it passed in the (k) Journal. affirmative (k). So oddly were the members of this parliament chosen !- Mr. Maidstone, speaking concerning them, fays, . The lord-general by his authority, (which was but military) fummons one hundred perfons out of all parts of the nation (with competent indifferency and equality) to represent the nation, and invests them with legislative authority. They meet and accept it, assume the title of parliament, and fit in the house of commons, and enact sundry laws; but in a short time, made it appear to all considering and unprejudiced men, that they were huic negotion impares, non obstante their godliness; of which the e more judicious of them being fensible, contrived the matter fo as to dissolve themselves by an act of their (1) Thurloe, c own, and refolve their authority, whence they first derived it, upon the general (1).' Cromwell's own account of the proceedings of these men is severe enough, though it be not expressed in the clearest manner. ' It was thought then, fays he, that men of our s judgment, that had fought in the wars, and were all of a piece upon that account, why furely these men will hit it, and them men will do it to the purpose whatever can be defired, truly we did think, and I did think fo, the more to blame of, and fuch a company of men were chose and did proceed in action, and truly this was the naked truth, that the iffue was not answerable to the simplicity and honesty of the defign. What the iffue of that meeting would have been, and was feared, upon which the fober men of that meeting did withdraw, and came and returned my power as far as they could, they did actually the greater part of them into my own hands, professing and believing that the issue of that meeting would have been the subversion of your laws, and of all the liberties of this nation, the destruction of the ministers of this nation. In a word, the confusion of all things,

and

vol. i. p. 765.

back into his hands, and thereby gave him

and instead of order, to set up the judicial law of Moses, in abrogation of all our administrations, to have been administred the judicial law of Moses, pro hic & nunc, according to the wisdom of any man that would have interpreted the text, this way or that (m) Speech, way (m). Lord Clarendon assures us, That there 1657.
were amongst them divers of the quality and degree of gentlemen, and who had estates, and such a proportion of credit and reputation, as could consist with the guilt they had contracted. But much the major part of them confifted of inferiour persons, of no quality or name, artificers of the meanest trades, known only by their gifts in praying and preaching.

which was now practifed by all degrees of men, but fcholars, throughout the kingdom. In which number, that there may a better judgment be made of the rest, it will not be amis to name one, from whom that parliament itself was afterwards denominated,

who was Praise-God (that was his christian name) Barebone, a leather-feller in Fleetstreet, from whom (he bareone, a leather-feller in Puegram, from whom (he being a reminent fpeaker in it) it was afterwards called

Praise-God Barebone's * parliament. In a word, they were generally a pack of weak senseless fellows, fit only to bring the name, and reputation of parliaments, (n) Vol. vi. lower than it was yet (n). Mr. Hume speaks with P. 482.

like contempt of this affembly, and is as severe as Clarendon himself in his account of their proceedings.—
His lordship afterwards adds, 'And these men thus

* Sir Anthony Ashley Cooper was much more eminent and active; as appears from the journals. From his transactions in this and Cromwell's after parliaments, Dryden took occasion to characterize him in his early years as—

A vermin, wriggling in th' usurper's ear;
Bart'ring his venal wit for sums of gold,
He cait himself into the faint-like mould;
Groan'd, figh'd and pray'd, while godline was gain;
The loudest bagpipe of the squeaking train,
MEDAL

an opportunity of affuming and exercifing the brought together, continued in this capacity near fix months, to the amazement, and even mirth of the e people. In which time they never entered into any grave and ferious debate, that might tend to any fettlement, but generally expressed great sharpness against all learning, out of which they thought the clergy had grown, and still would grow. There were now on bishops for them to be angry with; they had ale ready reduced all that order to the lowest distress. But their quarrel was against all who had called themfelves ministers, and who, by being called fo, re-ceived tythes, and respect from their neighbours. 'They looked upon the function itself to be antichrifitian, and the persons to be burthensome to the peoe ple, and the requiring and payment of tythes to be absolute Judaism, and they thought fit they should be sabolished together; and that there might not for the time to come be any race of people who might revive those pretences, they proposed that all lands be-Ionging to the univerlities, and colleges in those universities, might be sold, and the monies that should arise thereby, be disposed for the publick service, and to ease the people from the payment of taxes and contributions (o). This is very virulent as usual; and as usual has a great mixture of falshood. Many of Cromwell's after councellors were in this affembly, fuch as Sir Anthony Ashley Cooper, Mr. Strickland, Sir-Charles Welfely: many of the chief officers of the army and navy, as Blake, Moncke, Montagu, afterwards Earl of Sandwich, besides the general and other officers mentioned above. What mirth they afforded I know not. They were treated as the supream authority of the nation, and had the most humble applications made to them from the chief cavaliers, such as the Earl of Worcester, the Earl and Countess of Derby, the Lord Mansfield, the Earl of Shrewsbury, and many others, whose - petitions are mentioned in the Journals; not to take notice of their being folemnly addressed to by sovereign princes, and their fending ambaffadors abroad: whether they ever entered into any grave or ferious debate which might tend to a fettlement, the reader will be able to judge, when he is informed, that for the right ordering and fettling of the business of the house, they appointed committees for the affairs of Ireland and Scotland: for the law; the army; for inspecting the treasuries, and regulating of officers and falaries; for the bufiness of trade and corporations; for the poor, and regulating commissions of the peace; for considering of public debts, and to receive accufations of bribery, public frauds, and breach of public trust; and for the advancement (p) Journat, of learning (p). And whoever will look into their jour- 1653. nals will find that they were employed about points of the highest national concernment, such as the abolishing the court of chancery on account of its expensivenels and delays; the forming a new body of the law; the uniting Scotland with England, regulating-marriages, and vetting the folemnization and cognizance of them in the civil magistrate; 'together with' other things' of moment. It no way appears that they intended to fet up the judicial law of Moses, or sell the lands belonging to the universities, and therefore the imputation of such intentions to them, must be deemed unjust and abusive. Tythes * from the beginning had engaged their attention; but that they had no defign to abolish them, is plain from the following report made: by Mr. Sadler, a few days before their relignation, from the committee for tythes - Refolved, That it be

(0) Vol. vi. p. 484. the supream power of the nation, under the title

^{*} In the manuscript, belonging formerly to colonel Saunders, quoted in note (ss), it is proposed, ' That tythes be wholly taken away, the parishioners from whom they are due, paying in lieu thereof to the state where they are not appropriate, and to the owners where they are, moderate and certain rent-charge out of their lands; the ministers to be maintained, either by the voluntary contributions of fuch as defire to hear them, or else by some settled pensions ou. of the public treafury.'

title of Lord Protector of the commonwealth

presented to the parliament, that all such as are or fhall be approved for publick preachers of the Gospel in the publick meeting places, shall have and enjoy the maintenance already fettled by law; and fuch other encouragement, as the parliament hath already appointed, or hereafter shall appoint: and that where any scruple payment of tythes, the three next justices of the peace, or two of them, shall, upon complaint, call the parties concerned before them; and, by the oaths of lawful witnesses, shall duly apportion the value of the said tythes, to be paid either in moe ney, or land by them to be fet out according to the faid value, to be held and enjoyed by him that was to have the faid tythes: and in case such apportioned value be not duly paid, or enjoyed, according to the order of the faid justices, the tythes shall be paid in kind, and shall be recovered in any court of record. · Upon hearing and confidering what hath been offered to this committee touching propriety in tythes of. incumbents, rectors, possessors of donatives, or proorizte tythes, it is the opinion of this committee, and resolved to be so reported to the parliament, that the faid persons have a legal propriety in tythes (q).' So that a regulation in tythes we see was the thing intended, which yet raised a clamour against, and fixed a character on this parliament, as enemies to the ministry, to learning, and every thing valuable in fociety. Such is the hatred of ecclefialtics against all who would reform their laws and customs, however unjust and tyrannical. 'Tis not forgotten how zealous these men were against the Quakers tythe bill in the year 1736. A bill founded on strict justice and perfect equity, and opposed through to the Coun- interest, prejudice, or worse views, as was then shewn, try Parson's Plea against to a demonstration, in one of the best written tracts of the Quakers the age, by Lord Hervey (r) .- The parliament soon Tythe Bill, after refigned back their power into the hands of Crom-Svo Lond. The account given of it in the Journals is as

(q) Journal, Dec. 2, 3653.

1736.

wealth of England, Scotland and Ireland.

The

follows: Monday, 12th of December, 1653. 'It being moved in the house this day, that the sitting of this parliament any longer, as now conflituted, will onot be for the good of the commonwealth; and that therefore it was requifite to deliver up unto the ford e general Cromwell the powers which they received from him; and that motion being seconded by several other members; the house rose; and the Speaker, with ' many of the members of the house, departed out of the house to Whitehall; where they, being the greater ' number of the members fitting in parliament, did, by a writing under their hands, relign unto his excel-' lency their faid powers: and Mr. Speaker, attended with the members, did prefent the same to his excelelency, accordingly.' The following extract from a letter of Buffy Mansel, Eig; one of the members of this parliament, to his brother Edward Pritchard, Esq; will give us a clearer idea of this affair. 'Since I writ my alast to you, and some days before, wee were about a report from the committee of tieths, about fending commissioners to the several circuits to cast out all that they judged to be unfit to be ministers, and to ' put in all they judged to be fit upon the last day of the weeke. This power and its appurtenances came to the question, and it was carried in the negative. Hereupon those gentlemen, that were for the report, came fooner than their usual hower upon Munday to the house, and there spoke of the unlikelihood of doing good, and inflanced in several things, that they ' judged evill, that was don; and therefore defired that they would goe, and returne that power they had from whence they received it; and thereupon about forty, and the Speaker went to the generall, and did accordingly. Twenty feven flayed in the house a little ' time speaking to one another, and going to speak to the Lord in prayer, coll. Goff and liet coll. White came into the house, and defired them that were there The grounds and reasons of this new settle-

(s) Thurloe, vol. i. p. 637.

to come out. Some answered, that they were there by a call from the generall, and would not come out by their defire, unless they had a command from him. 'They returned noe answer, but went out, and fetched two files of mulquetiers, and did as good as force them out; amongst whom I was an unworthy one (s).'-Ludlow, speaking of this resignation, attributes it to the ambition and artifice of Cromwell in the following words: 'The perfidious Cromwell having forgot his " most folemn professions and former vows, as well as the blood and treasure that had been spent in this con-' test, thought it high time to take off the masque, and ' resolved to sacrifice all our victories and deliverances to his pride and ambition, under colour of taking upon him the office as it were of a high constable, ' in order to keep the peace of the nation, and to refrain men from cutting one another's throats. One difficulty yet remained to obstruct his design, and that was the convention, which he had affembled and in-· vested with power, as well as earnestly sollicited to reform the law, and reduce the c'ergy to a more evan-' gelical constitution. And having sufficiently alarmed those interests, and shown them their danger from the convention, he informs them farther, that they can-6 not be ignorant of the confusion that all things are brought into by the immoderate zeal of those in authority, and to what extremities matters might be reduced, if permitted to go on; possibly, faid he, to 4-the utter extirpation of law and gospel from amongst us; and therefore advised that they would join their interests to his, in order to prevent this inundation. · His propolition was readily embraced by the corrupt part of the lawyers and clergy, and so he became their s protector, and they the humble supporters of his ty-' ranny. But that his usurpation might seem less horrid, he fo contrived it by his instruments, that some of the convention must openly manifest their disapment will deserve (zz) the attention of the curious

e probation of their own proceedings, and under divers fpecious pretences put a period to their fitting (t).'____ (t) Vol. ii. When the instrument of refignation figned as above P. 471. mentioned in the journal, was brought to Cromwell, 'tis faid he lifted up his eyes with aftonishment; and, with no less seeming modesty refused to receive it; but, at length, through the importunity of major-gee neral Lambert and others, representing to him that the welfare of the nation absolutely required his acceptance of the parliament's refignation, he thought fit to com-' ply with their request.' ___ Cromwell indeed in a speech made to the ensuing parliament, September 12, 1654, politively affirms in the most solemn manner, ' That (u) Parliahe was fo far from having any hand in this project, mentary that he was an absolute stranger to the design, till the xx. p. 244. Speaker, with the major part of the house, came to In this vol. him with the instrument of their refignation (u). is the com-For my own part, I much doubt of the strict truth of count of this this Can it be supposed that his creatures and favou- Parliament rites would have ventured on fuch a thing without be-extant. ing fatisfied of his approbation? Or that the officers would have dared to bring in a file of musquetiers, and in a manner force the non-refigners out of the house, if they had not been well affured that it would be acceptable to him? But be this as it may, the lord general having the power of the nation thus formally refigned up into his hands, he embraced the opportunity of exercifing it in his own name, in order to preferve the

(zz) The grounds and reasons of this new settlement deferve attention.] Cromwell having accepted the parlia-Z 3 fome small influence on his determination *.

peace and secure the laws and religion of the nation as he professed, though possibly the lust of sway might have

^{*} Mr. Hume, in order I suppose to divert the readers, on mentioning Praise-God Barebone, has informed them, that 'It was usual for the pretended Saints at this time to change their names from Henry, Ed-curious reader. But how blameworthy foe-

ment's inflrument of refignation, called a council of officers and others, who after feveral days confultation, resolved that a council should be named, to consist not of more than 21, nor less than 13 persons, and that the general should be chosen lord protector of the three nations. On the 16th of December, 1653, Oliver with great pomp was inaugurated in Westminster-Hall, after having first solemnly sworn to an instrument of government prepared by his council, and others. It is well drawn, and fhews much judgment. By it the supream legislative authority of the commonwealth was placed in one person, and the people assembled in parliament; but the executive was to be in the lord protector, affifted with a council, who should dispose of all magistracy and honor, and have the power of pardons and benefit of forfeitures. In him likewife, with confent of parliament when fitting, was vefted the power of the militia, and forces by fea and land, as well as the prerogative of making war and peace. So that Comwell, who by this instrument was constituted lord protestor, was in a manner vested with the old real rights of the English Kings, and had the authority conferred on him. But that provision might be made for the people, and their benefit and advantage confulted, it was declared.

ward, Anthony, William, which they regarded as Heathenish, into 6 others more fanctified and godly: even the new Testament names James, 6 Andrew, &c. were not held in such regard as those borrowed from the 6 Old Testament, Hezekiah, Habbakuk, Joshua, Zorobabel. Some-6 times a whole godly sentence was adopted for a name. In proof of this he gives a list of names of a jury in the county of Sussex about this time, on the authority of one Brome, an obscure and inconsiderable writer. This gentleman, however, should have known that this practice, (not of changing their names, as he supposes, but of giving sanctissed and godly ones to their children) how rid culous soever, was in use long before these times; and also that it was not more common then, than it had before been. Cambden * would have informed him of the one, and the great variety of lists of names still remaining in Thurloe, Scobel, and other coll-ctors, of the other,

Cambden's Remains, p. 42. 410. Lond, 1629.

ver the protector might have been in the acquisition

'That the laws should not be altered, suspended, abrogated, or repealed, or any new law made, nor any tax, charge, or imposition laid upon the people, but by common confent in parliament.' Triennial parliaments were also ordained; a new representative, in proportion to the contributions of the respective counties towards the public expence, to the number of 400, together with 30 for Scotland, and the like number for Ireland, enacted; and bills passed in parliament declared to have the force of laws, twenty days after they should be offered to the protector, though his affent was refused. These and many other particulars in favour of the people, are to be found in the inftrument of government, by which it plainly appears that despotism was far enough from being the intention of Gromwell and his officers. It must not be omitted, that 6 A constant yearly revenue was ordained to be raised for maintaining 10,000 horse, and 20,000 foot in England, Scotland and Ireland, for the defence and the fecurity thereof, and also for a convenient number of ships for guarding of the seas; besides 200,000 l. ber annum, for defraying the other necessary charges of administration of justice, and other expences of the government; which revenue was to be raifed by the cultoms, and fuch other ways and means, as should be agreed upon by the lord protector and the council, and was not to be taken away or diminished, nor the way agreed upon for raifing the fame altered, but by the confent of the lord protector and the parliament. He was invested also with a power, till the meeting of the first parliament, to raise money for the puroposes aforesaid; and also to make laws and ordinances for the peace and welfare of these nations, where it · should be necessary; which should be binding and in force, until order should be taken in parliament concerning the fame.' Z 4

110 Jui

quifition of his high office; or how wick-

On Cromwell's death, a protector was to be elected by the council. This was a bait for the grandees *. - It may well enough be thought fuch a change in the government as this could not happen without cenfure. The army party were, for the most part, addicted to a commonwealth, and many of the most able men in the nation were of the same judgment. These thought they had in vain abolished kingship, if one man must rule over them under what name or title soever, and they could not without indignation, behold a man fo greatly elevated above them, whom they had so lately feen their equal or inferiour. Nor did they refrain afking who made him protector? or what right he had to the supream power? It was to these kind of men Gromwell endeavoured to justify himself, and thereby to soften their prejudices, and obtain their concurrence in his views for his own and the nation's glory. See with what art he talks to them in the following passages --- I re-4 ceived this refignation [the late parliament's] fays he, having formerly used my endeavours and persuasions to keep them together; observing their differences, I thought it my duty to give advice to them, that fo I ' might prevail with them for union: but it had the ef-· fect I told you, and I had my disappointment. When this was fo, we were exceedingly to feek how to fettle things for the future. My power again, by this re-' fignation, was as boundlefs and unlimited as before; 'all things being subjected to arbitrariness, and myself a person having power over the three nations, bound-' lefly and unlimited; and upon the matter, all government dissolved, all civil administrations at an end, as will be presently made appear. The gentlemen that

But when Oilver's fovereignty was more firmly effablished, we find in the humble petition and advice of the parliament in 1656, the power of appointing and declaring a person to succeed in the government, was invested in himself alone.

edly soever he acquired it, (for his admirers

undertook to frame this government, did confult divers days together (they being of known integrity and ability) how to frame fomewhat that might give us fettlement; and they did fo; and that I was not privy to their councils, they know it. When they had fi-' nished their model in some measure, or made a very good preparation of it, it became communicative. They told me, that except I would undertake the government, they thought things would hardly come to a composure and settlement; but blood and confusion would break in upon us. I denied it again and again, as God and those persons know; not complimentingby, as they also know, and as God knows. I confess, after many arguments, and after the letting of me know that I did not receive any thing that put me into any higher capacity than I was in before; but that it limited me, and bound my hands to act nothing to the prejudice of those nations, without consent of a council, until the parliament, and then limited by the parliament, as the act of government expresseth, I did accept it. I might repeat this again to you, if it were needful; but I think I need not. I was arbitrary in power, having the armies in the three nations under my command; and truly not very ill be-· loved by them, nor very ill beloved then by the peoople, by the good people; and I believe I should have been more, if they had known the truth, as things were before God, and in themselves, and before di-· vers of those gentlemen whom I but now mentioned unto you. I did at the intreaty of divers persons of 6 honour and quality, at the intreaty of very many of the chief officers of the army then present, and at their request, I did accept of the p'ace and title of protector; and was in the presence of the commissioners of 6 the great feal, the judges, the lord mayor and alder-'men of the city of London; the foldiery, divers gentlemen, citizens, and divers other people and persons

ers confess he had faults, and pretend not wholly of quality, &c. accompanied to Westminster Hall, where I took my oath to this government. This was not done in a corner; it was open and publick. This truffs, to be faithful in calling this parliament .-

tri Parlia. mentary History, vol. 3x. p. 355.

() Speech at Whitehall, Ap. 13, 1657.

government hath been exercised by a council, with a defire to be faithful in all things; and, amongst other This is a narrative that discovers to you the series of providence, and of transactions leading me into this condition wherein I now fland (x). In another of his speeches, he declares, 'He undertook the protectorship, not so much out of hope of doing any good, as out of a defire to prevent mischief and evil; and he compares his flation to that of a good conflable, to keep the peace of the parish (y).—This renders probable what Burnet relates concerning his speeches to the republican enthulialts, with whom he had been closely connected, and of whom he had availed himself in his rife to greatness.- It was no easy thing, says he, for "Cromwell to fatisfy those, when he took the power into his own hands; fince that looked like a flep to kingship, which [John] Godwin had long represented as the great antichrist, that hindered Christ's being fet on the throne. To these he said, and as some have told me, with many tears, that he would rather have taken a shepherd's staff than the protector-· ship, fince nothing was more contrary to his genius than a shew of greatness: but he saw it was necesfary at that time to keep the nation from falling into extream disorder, and from becoming open to the common enemy: and therefore he only stept in between the living and the dead, as he phrased it, in that interval, till God should direct them on what bottom they ought to fettle: and he affured them, that then he would furrender the heavy load lying ' upon him, with a joy equal to the forrow with which he was affected while under that shew of dignity (z).

(z) Burnet, vol. i. p. 104.

wholly to exculpate him) yet certain it is,

This was all very artful, and probably had its intended effect.

Cromwell in the foregoing speech talks of his having, on the diffolution of the parliament, power over the three nations, boundless and unlimited. This must suppose that he thought he had conquered all, or that all were subject to his rule and command. A strange doctrine! His country might well have cried out, 6 Are we then so unhappy as to be conquered by the person, whom we hired at a daily rate, like a labourer, to conquer others for us? Did we furnish him with arms only to draw and try upon our enemies, and keep them for ever sheathed in the bowels of his friends? Did we fight for liberty against our prince, that we might become flaves to our fervant? --- The right of conquest can only be exercised upon those against whom the war is declared, and the victory obtained. So that no whole nation can be faid to be conquered but by a foreign force. In all civil wars, men are fo far from stating the quarrel against their country, that they do it only against a person or party which they really believe, or at least pretend to be pernicious to it; neither can there be any just cause for the destruc-6 tion of a part of the body, but when it is done for the preservation and safety of the whole. 'Tis our country that raises men in the quarrel, our country that arms, our country that pays them, our country that authorizes the undertaking, and that distinguishes it from rapine and murder. Lastly, 'tis our country that directs and commands the army, and is indeed their general. So that to fay in civil wars that the e prevailing party conquers their country, is to fay the country conquers itself. And if the general only of that party be the conqueror, the army by which he is ' made so, is no less conquered than the army which is beaten, and have as little reason to triumph in that victory, by which they lose both their honour and li-6 berty.

he rivaled the greatest of the English monarchs

(a) Cowley's Difcourfe concerning Oliliver Cromwel', p. 80.

berty. So that if Cromwell conquered any party, it was only that against which he was fent, and what that was must appear by his commission (a). As to the distracted state of affairs, by reason of the dissolution of the government, and the tendency all things had to consusting. Mr. Cowley, with his usual spirit, says, the government was broke: Who broke it? It was

The government was broke; Who broke it? It was diffolved; Who diffolved it? It was extinguished; Who was it but Gramwell, who not only put out the Night, but cast away even the very snuff of it? As if a man should murder a whole family, and then pos-

fels himself of the whole house, because 'tis better

(b) Id. p. 82. 5 that he, than that only rats should live there (b). However, though Cromwell probably was blameworthy for turning out his masters and distolving the government, yet as things were, there seems to have been hardly any remedy so ready at hand for the establishment of peace and order, as his assuming the sovereignty, and exerting the power he had got into his hands for the good and benefit of the three nations. All other power, through his means indeed, was extinguished; but there was a necessity for some sovereignty or other to be erected, that men might not be forced upon new civil wars. And who but Gromwell was capable of this? Who so sit, in his own eye at least, to exercise it?—But let us attend to the reasons which were given by the protector's order, or at least approbation, for this new settlement. They are contained in a small tract, intitled A true state of the case of the commonwealth of having spoken concerning the various transactions during the ward the consequences thereof; the authority and government of the long parliament; the carriage and resignation of the next chosen; and severely censured refignation of the next chosen; and severely censured many of the principles professed by some of its members: it goes on to say, Wherefore upon these, and

[c] London, England. &c. in reference to the late established governprinted for Thomas Newcomb, having spoken concerning the various transactions during the wars the consequences thereof; the authority and

6 divers

narchs in glory, and made himself courted and

divers confiderations, it was agreed to come to some such folid and certain course of settlement, as might hereaster bar up the way against those manifold inconveniences, which we have felt under other fleeting forms, and reduce us (as near as may be, with most convenience) to our antient way of government by fupream magiftrates and parliaments. And of this nature is the form now established, and already made publick. But to the end this may be made clear and manifest, we fhall in the next place discourse somewhat concerning it in general, and then descend to particulars. In gee neral, we fay; that as this last change hath been made upon the same grounds of reason and equity, that ne-' ceffitated all foregoing changes in the outward forms, and was admitted of absolute necessity to fave a finking nation out of the gulph of milery and confusion, caused by the changeable counsels and corrupt interest of other men, who violated their principles, and brake the trust committed to them; so none of those former alterations did so truly make good, or so fully provide for the fecurity of those great ends of religion and liberty, which were as the blood and spirits running through every vein of the parliament and army's declarations; so that though the commonwealth may onow appear with a new face in the outward form, vet it remains still the same in substance, and is of a better complexion and constitution than heretofore. And if we take a survey of the whole together, we find the foundation of this government laid in the peoe ple. Who hath the power of altering old laws, or making new? The people in parliament; without them nothing of this nature can be done; they are to be governed only by fuch laws as they have chosen, or shall chuse, and not to have any imposed upon them. Then who is to administer or govern according to those laws, and see them put in execution? Not a person claiming an hereditary right of sovereignty, reignty, or power over the lives and liberties of the allowing the people neither right nor liberty, but what depends upon royal grant and pleafure, according to the tenor of that prerogative chale lenged heretofore by the Kings of England; under whom, if the commonalty enjoyed any thing they might call their own, it was not to be so much esteemed a matter of right, as a boon and effect of grace and favour. But the government now is to be mae naged by a person that is elective, and that election must take its rife originally and virtually from the people, as we shall fully evince by and by, in particular, and shew that all power, both legislative and executive, doth flow from the community; than which there cannot be greater evidence of publick freedom (d). - We see our friends have taken in the good of all the three forts of government, and bound them all in one. If war be, here is the unitive virtue (but nothing else) of monarchy to encounter it; and here is the admirable counsel of aristocrasse to manage it: if peace be, here is the industry and courage of de-6 mocrafie to improve it. And whereas in the present constitution, the legislative and executive powers are feperated; the former being vested in a constant succession of parliaments elective by the people, the latter in an elective Lord Protector and his successors, affisted by a council; we conceive the state of this commonwealth reduced to fo just a temper, that the ills either of successive parliaments, furnished with opower both of executing and making laws, or of a e perpetual parliament, (which are divition, faction, and confusion) being avoided on the one side, and the inconveniences of an absolute lordly power on the other; the frame of government appears to well bounded on both fides, that we hope it may now (through the bleffing of God) prove a feafonable mean (as for the better defending these dominions against enemies abroad, and promoting our interest in foreign parts, so also) of peace and settlement to this distracted nation;

and be of durable continuance to succeeding ages (*).

In this manner was the erection of the protectorate defended.

the Commonwealth, p. 27.

(d) Cafe of

(*) Id. p.

fended. By the same writer we find it endeavoured to be proved, 'That by this settlement all the grand acts of fovereignty were either immediately, or influentially · lodged in the people; and that the objections against 'it were ill founded.' After which follows a little panegyric on Cromwell and his new government, in the following words: ' As touching the person, whom the Lord hath now advanced and fet over us to be our fupream magistrate, we shall not say much, because he feeks not the praise of men; only we believe even the enemies will confess that he is every way worthy to rule, whom God hath been pleased to use as his instrument in that glorious work of redeeming the liberties of his people; for we are bold to fay (weighing all circumflances together) that this nation was never really free, onor in a way of enjoying its freedom fo fully as now; fo that there wants nothing but a cordial close with the government, to destroy all hopes of the common ene- (e) Case of my, and compleat our happiness (e). — This piece the Comiss referred to by Cromwell for fatisfaction concerning p. 47. his government, in one of his speeches to the parliament (f), and it was also translated into Latin, for a siamentary justification abroad. What force there is in it, the rea-History, vol. der may form some judgment by the above extracts. xx. p. 419. -No fooner had the inauguration of Cromwell been performed, but he and his council had feveral applications and addresses made to them from divers considerable places, acknowledging his power and govern- (g) Whit-" ment, and promifing obedience to it (g)." Indeed lock, p. there was an almost universal acquiescence for the pre-579. fent, as is owned by a mortal foe to Cromwell, in the following passage. 'That which disposed the minds of the people to abstain from a present protestation against this government, besides the agony of the late confusions, and the astonishment upon the new wonderful alteration, was, that it was but temporary, and that limited to a very short time; a free parliament was to be called within so many months, which was entirely to confider and fettle the government of the kingdom, and to remove all those obstructions which hinder the peace and happiness of the nation, and to and dreaded (AAA) by the nations around him.

(b) Letter c from a true and lawful Member of Parliament, c to oncof the Lords of his Highnefles p Councel, p. h 53. 4to. 1656.

restore it to that tranquillity and quiet it had been so long deprived of: and the protector was fworn to a due observation of all those articles, which he had himself prescribed for his own rules and bounds, and therefore the more hope that he would be contented to be limited by them (b).'—The truth is, by the power and artifice of Oliver the government of England had been diffolved, and a new one was now erected, which promised fair enough for the preservation and happiness of the community. Nothing therefore remained for the people to do, but to submit unto it, and make the best of it. 'The obligation of subjects to the sovereign, fays Mr. Hobbs, is understood to last as long, and no longer, than the power lafteth, by which he is able to protect them. For the right men have by ature to protect themselves, when none else can protect them, can by no covenant be relinquished. The fovereignty is the foul of the commonwealth; which once departed from the body, the members do no more receive their motion from it. The end of obedience is protection; which, wherefoever a man feeth it, either in his own, or in another's fword, nature applyeth his obedience to it, and his endeavour to maintain it. And though fovereignty, in the intention of them that make it, be immortal; yet it is in its own nature, not only subject to violent death, but foreign war; but also through the ignorance and pal-6 fions of men, it hath in it, from the very institution, many feeds of natural mortality, by intestine dis-

(i) Leviathan, p. 114. Fol. Lond, 1651.

'cord (i).'

(AAA) He rivaled the greatest of our monarchs in glery, and made himself courted and dreaded by the nations around him.] 'If there ever appeared in any state, says

Wicquefort, a chief who was at the same time both tyrant and usurper, most certainly Oliver Cromwell was such: and yet for all that, never was there an usurper fo folemnly acknowledged. Immediately after the 4 death

him.—The peace he gave to the Dutch; (though death of the late King, Don Alonfo de Cardenas, embassador from Spain, legitimated this bastard republick; and Oliver had no fooner made himself sovereign, under the quality of protector, than all the Kings of the earth proftrated themselves before this idol. To gratify him, the lawful King, [Charles II.] with his brothers, were driven out of those kingdoms and provinces, that ought to have ferved him as places of refuge or asylums. Lockart, who was embasfador from the usurper, was not only received in France with all the honors that could have been done to the 6 minister of the first monarch of Christendom, but cardinal Mazarine even refused to see the King of Great Britain, who had travelled quite through the kingdom to come to him at the foot of the Pyrenean hills, and would not fo much as speak to the person that came from him, and waited at the door of the chief minister: who at the same time had daily conferences with the usurpers. All that the dispossessed King could . obtain was, that the cardinal gave him leave that the Duke of Ormand should speak to him as he passed along, and as it were accidentally, as he came from his own quarters to the isle of the Conference.

The King of Spain, who was brother-in-law to the deceased King, behaved himself a little better. He suffered the son to be in safety at Brussels, where he also met with some civilities: and his chief minister Don Lewis de Haro, at the Pyrenean hills, shewed him that respect which the cardinal had resused him. The King of France being advanced as far as the frontiers of Flanders, the protector sent Falconbridge his son-in-law, to pay him those civilities, which sovereigns are used to shew one another on like occasions: and the Duke de Crequy, one of the first Lords of France, next to the Princes, was sent to London, to thank the usurper for his civilities: and that nothing might be wanting to the ceremony, the cardinal would have his

(though it has not wanted censurers) was ho-

e nephew Mancini accompany the duke. The difference that is to be feen in the behaviour of these two Kings of France and Spain, who were both nearly ree lated to the King of England, proceeded only from the difference of their interest. The Spanish embas-' fador had used his utmost endeavours with the usure per, to engage him in the interest of the King his master; even to the offering him a hundred thousand crowns per month, two hundred thousand by way of advance, and an army of twenty thousand men to reconquer Calice, Cromwell had rejected these offers; and as he feared more the neighbourhood of France, than he hoped for advantage from the languishing and remote strength of Spain, he sided with the first, whose. friend he became; by that means obliging the other to be so to the King of Great Britain, whose three kingdoms he had usurped (b). Wicquefort has not exaggerated matters in this account: for by the best authority we are told, "That. upon Oliver's affuming the government, both those. crowns [France and Spain] applied to him. · Alanso de Cardenas, the Spanish ambassador then refiding here, in a private audience, congratulated his. access to the government, expressing the great satiffaction his master had received therein; in whose aname he did affure him of the true and constant friendhip of Spayne, in the condition that he then flood; or if he would go a step farther and take upon him the, crown, that his mafter would venture the crown of (i) Thuslee, Spayne to defend him in it; with many other expres-vol. i. p. 6 fions of kindness and good-will (i). The distinction with which the English ambassador in France was treated, will be best explained by a letter of Lockhart's to Thurlee, dated Paris, May 7, 1656. My last, from St. Dennis told your honour, that I was to lodge As I was going to my coach, Mr. Swift returned from the cardinal (from whom he 759.

(b) Embalfador, and his Functions, p. 17.

honourable to himself, and the nation. He pre-received extraordinary civilities) and told me his eminence earnestly desired, that I would do him (as he faid) honor, to receive a visit from him next day at St. Dennis. Upon this I resolved to stay there till Monday morning. Upon the Lord's day, I received a very kind welcome from him by the mafter of the house, and a letter very full of kind expressions. After my arrival at Paris, I renewed my desire both to his eminence and count Bryen for audience, which is promised me to morrow at night; and after I am asfured by a person of quality sent to me this morning by the cardinal, that I shall have the freedom allowed " me to wait upon him as often as I will. Count Bulion fent also to me this morning, to tell me that he was commanded by the King to wait upon me this day to congratulate my fafe arrival into France; and was very earnest with me to appoint him an hour, which I (k) Thursoe, left to his own discretion and conveniency (k). Lord 771. Fauconberg's reception in France is thus related by himfelf, in a letter to H. Cromwell, dated Whitehall, June 8, 1658. I am now returned from the French court, where I have had the honourablest reception imaginable. The King did not only keepe bare at ' my publique audiences, but, when I made him a private vifit, he talked with me in the garden an hour or ' two uncovered. From the cardinal the honours I had were particular and unufual: he waved the state of a publique audience, came out of his own room to meet me, led me presently into his cabinet; after an hour's discourse in private, he conducted me downe to the very door, where my coach flood, a ceremony he dispenses with not only to all others, but even to the 'King himself. The charge of two very handsome tables were defrayed (for myfelf and followers) by the King, all the while I stayed. In summe, through all their astions not the least circumstance was omitted, that might witness the truth of these respects they A a 2 6 beare

prescribed the conditions, and they were forced

(1) vol. vii. beare his highnesse and the English nation (1).' With what detestation soever princes may speak of usurpers, p. 158. we fee they submit to pay them the tribute of adulation, when they suppose it for their interest: and though with abhorrence they speak of these men as meer tyrants and rebels, none are more follicitous to obtain their favour and affistance. A very edifying example, truly! Mazarine was bitterly reproached by some of the French for his extream submission to Cromwell, as we find in the following passage: 6 these are the people shis friends and counsellors] who make you treat with Cromwell in a manner fo mean and injurious to the French nation; (m) Advice who advise you to lower our flags before his ships, and to Card. who are willing to allow him the title of protector. Mazarine, at the end of of the protestants of that kingdom (m). Retz's Mcthe courtship of the two crowns to Oliver, was so great moirs, vol. and visible that it exposed them to laughter. 'The iv. p. 247. 22 mo. · Dutch struck a medal with the bust of Cromwell and his titles on one fide, with Britannia on the other, and Cromwell thrusting his head in her bosom, with his breeches down and his backside bare, the Spanish embassador stooping to kiss it, while the French embassador holds him by the arm, with these words infcribed, Retire toi, l'honneur apartient au Roi mon maitre. (n) Biograi. e. Come back, that 'honor belongs to the King my phia Britanmaster (n).' This medal is yet preserved in several nica, p. 1564. Dutch cabinets. It was faid also that a 'picture had been set to sale at Pont-neuf [in Paris] wherein the olord protector was fitting on a close-stole at his busie ness, and the King of Spain on the one side, and the (o) Thurloe, ' King of France on the other, offering him paper to. wipe his breech (o).'--Indeed the friendship of Oiivol. iii. p. 658. ver was earnestly sought after by most of the Kings and (p) Memoirs of the House Princes of his age. Frederick William, elector of Branof Branden- denburg, whose fame is rendered immortal by the pen of burg, p. 92. his royal descendant, courted the friendship of Cromwell (p). Whit'ock in a letter to his highness dated Up-F7;8.

lal,

forced to accept of them, though at the expende

fal, January 13, 1653, gives him a particular account of the joy the Queen of Sweden expressed on his assuming the protectorate, and in conclusion adds, ' She told me she would write herself to my lord protector, and defired me in my letters to acquaint your highness, that no person had a greater esteem and respect of ' your highness than she had, which she would be ready to manifest, and was very joyful for this good news (a) Thurloe, from England (q).' The King of Denmark sent over a vol. ii. p. person to congratulate his highness, the lord protector, and was overjoyed that he was included in the Dutch treaty. The terms given to the King of Portugal, and the manner of demanding fatisfaction for his not executing the treaty figned by his embaffador, will much illustrate the high character Cromwell bore among his fellow fovereigns, and partly account for it. It is well known that the brother of the Portugal ambaffador, with his mafter of horse, were concerned in a murder in London; that they took refuge in his house as in a fanctuary; that being delivered up they were tried, and notwithstanding the plea of public character made by the brother, were condemned, and accordingly executed. 'The · Portuguese ambassador at eight of the clock in the 6 morning figned a treaty with the protector, and de-' parted from Gravesend at ten. His brother was beheaded in the afternoon, and his man hanged at Tyburn (r).' This was on the 10th of July, 1654. (r) Id. p. It may well enough be thought the treaty was not difhonourable to England *. 'In one of the articles e agreed with the ambassador it was expressed, that the

Aa 3

4 mere

^{*} The lord chancellor Hyde, in his speech to both houses, May 8, 1661, calls 'this treaty, in very many respects, the most advantageous to this nation that ever was entered into with any prince or people.' And again, in the same speech, he says, 'every article in it but one [a liberty given to Portugal to make levies of ten thousand men for their 'service] was entirely for the benefit of this nation, for the extraordinary advancement of trade, for the good of religion, and for the homour of the crown.'—Lives of the Lord Chancellors, vol. ii. p. 172.

pence of the house of Orange, to whom they

e merchants should enjoy liberty of conscience in the worship of God in their own houses and aboard their hips, enjoying also the use of English Bibles, and other good books, taking care, that they did not ex-ceed this liberty.' This article does honor to the humanity of Cromwell. But the King of Portugal, who was under the influence of superstition and her priests, fluck at confirming a treaty fo contrary to their maxims and views. 'Upon fending Mr. Meadows, fays the protector, unless we will agree to submit this article to the determination of the Pope, we cannot have it; whereby he would bring us to an owning of the Pope, which we hope, whatever befall us, we shall not, by the grace of God, be brought unto. And upon the fame iffue is that article put, whereby it is provided and agreed by his ambaffador, that any ships coming to that harbour, any of whose company, if they shall run from their faid ships shall be brought back again by the magistrate, and the commanders of the said fhips not required to pay the faid runaways their waeges, upon pretence that they are turned Catholiques, which may be colour for any knave to leave his duty, or for the Roman Catholiques to seduce our men, which we thought necessary to be provided against; vet to this also, as I said before, they would not confent without the approbation of the Pope, although it was agreed also by their ambassador. Upon the whole matter, we find them very false to us, who intended nothing but what was fimply honelt.'- To treat farther with men of this cast of mind, Oliver, I suppose, thought was bootless. He knew the right way to go to work with them; and he took it. This appears from the instructions he gave, May 6, 1656, to the generals Blake, and Mountague, in the following words: Whereas the King of Portugal doth refuse to ratify the treaties lately made with this commonwealth by his extraordinary ambassador here, or to perform any they were in a great measure indebted for their part thereof, either in what relates to the state, or to the people and merchants; and by his proceedings gives ground to believe, that nothing is less in his intentions; than to give just satisfaction therein; wherefore we do hereby authorize and require you, as it will confift with the present condition of the fleet under your command, and with your other principal infructions, to use your best endeavours, by the fleet, or fuch part thereof as you shall judge necessary, to take, arrest, and seize upon the fleet or fleets belonging to the King of Portugal, or any of his subjects, with their guns, cash, goods and merchandizes whatever, now expected from the East and West Indies, and to keep and deteyne the same without breaking of bulk or embezilment, towards such satisfaction for the wrongs and damages, which this state hath suffered from Portugal, and to give notice forthwith of what you shall do therein. And in case any of the ships of the faid King or his people shall make any resistance, you have hereby power to fight with, kill, and destroy, and to feek for, and burn all fuch as shall so resist. Nevertheless, if Mr. Philip Meadows, our envoy with the King of Portugal, shall before any seizure or act of hostility as aforesaid, give you affurance, that satisfaction is obtained upon the said treaties, that this (s) Thurloe, instruction shall be void (s). The admirals on the rose. receipt hereof failed towards Liston, and made known their orders to the English agent, who informing the court, obtained a speedy figning of the treaty by the King, and a very large fum of money for fatisfaction; which was shipped on board the fleet, and sent to Eng- (t) Id. vol. land (t). Mountague indeed seems not to have been well 124, 125. pleafed with the peace. He thought they had now Portugal at mercy, and should have imposed more rigorous terms. You have. fays he, (in a letter to Thurloe, ' dated June 17, 1656) at this time the Portugal upon his knees, and if we had authority to make farther their independency, and freedom.

Aa4

The prin-

! demands, we might ask what we would, (almost) and he durst not but perform it, or his country would be e all in rebellion. But this is to no purpose, the season being past.' Men of such spirit and resolution as these, were capable of executing any commands. We may suppose an action like this must have inspired Cremwell's neighbours with a fear of offending! ---- After what has been related in this note, the following paffages from Eurnet well eafily find credit, especially as several of them may be authenticated by incontestable vouchers. ' Cremwell's maintaining the honor of the ' nation in all foreign countries, gratifyed the vanity which is very natural to Englishmen; of which he was fo careful, that though he was not a crowned head, wet his ambaffadors had all the respect paid them which our Kings ambassadors ever had. He said the dignity of the crown was upon the account of the s nation, of which the King was only the representa-' tive head, so the nation being still the same, he would ' have the same regards paid to his ministers. Another instance of this pleased him much. Blake with the fleet has pened to be at Malaga, before he made war upon Spain: and some of his seamen went on hore, and met the hossie carried about; and not only s paid no respect to it, but laughed at those that did. So one of the priests put the people on resenting this f indignity; and they fell upon them and beat them feverely. When they returned to their ship they complained of this usage: and upon that Blake sent a trumpet to the viceroy, to demand the priest who was the chief instrument in that ill usage. The Viceroy answered he had no authority over the priest, and so could not dispose of him. Blake upon that sent him word, that he would not enquire who had the power to fend the priest to him, but if he were not fent within three hours he would burn their town: and they, being in no condition to refult him, fent the priest principal articles of it, I shall mention bes to him, who justified himself upon the petulant behaviour of the seamen. Blake answered, that if he had fent a complaint to him of it, he would have pus nished them severely, since he would not suffer his men to affront the established religion of any place s at which he touched: but he took it ill, that he fet on the Staniards to do it; for he would have all the world to know, that an Englishman was only to be punished by an Englishman. So he treated the priest f civilly, and fent him back, being fatisfied that he had him at his mercy. Cromwell was much delighted with 6 this, and read the letters in council with great fatiffaction; and faid, he hoped, he should make the ' name of an Englishman as great as ever that of a Ro-" man had been. The states of Holland were in such dread of him, that they took care to give him no fort of umbrage: and when at any time the King or his brothers came to see their fister, the Princess Royal, within a day or two after they used to send a deputation to let them know that Cromwell had required of the States that they should give them no harbour. King Charles, when he was feeking for colours for the war with the Dutch in the year 1672, urged it for one, that they suffered some of his rebels to live in their provinces. Borel, then their ambassador, anfwered, that it was a maxim of long standing among them, not to enquire upon what account strangers came to live in their country, but to receive them all, s unless they had been concerned in conspiracies against the persons of Princes. The King told him upon that, how they had used both himself and his brother. Borel, in great simplicity, answered: Ha! Sire, c'étoit une autre chose : Cromwell etoit un grand bomme, & il se faisoit craindre & par terre & par mer. This was very rough. The King's answer was : 7e. me ferai craindre aussi à mon tour : but he was scarce as good as his word. All Italy trembled at the low (BBB), for the information of my readers, name of Cromwell, and seemed under a pannick sear as long as he lived. His sleet scoured the Mediterranean: and the Turks durst not offend him; but denean: and the Turks durst not offend him;

(BBB) The principal articles of the peace I shall mention below.] In the note (MM) I have given an account of the commencement of the Dutch war, and the negotiations for peace until the interruption of the parliament by the power of Cromwell. From this change in the government, the enemy expected many advantages. But they foon found themselves mistaken; for the preparations for war were carried on with equal diligence as before, and the Dutch found to their cost that they had people of like spirit and resolution to deal with. For notwithstanding the ridicule with which the little parliament is almost constantly treated, they shewed bravery in carrying on the war; justice, generosity and good policy in rewarding the gallantry of their admirals, and inferiour commanders; and a regard to the honor of the nation in the terms they infifted on to make peace. 'In the year 1653 *, a bloody battle was fought between Van Tromp and the English admirals Dean and Moncke, wherein the Dutch were worsted, which occasioned tumults in Holland; and the same year in August, there was another bloody engagement, wherein the Dutch were again defeated, and Van Tromp flain in the action. The rest of the fleet being by this time cruelly broken and shattered, dis-

⁺ Gesta Bri • This sea-fight was on the 2d and 3d of June, the next on the 29th tannorum, and 30th of July following +. So that Mr. Burchett was negligent and Lond, 1659 mistaken.

ders, who will doubtless be pleased to find discouraged by this loss, made the best of their way to the Texel. The English having funk thirty three of the enemies ships in this battle, and taken about twelve hundred prisoners (which notwithstanding the forbidding to give or receive quarter by Moncke in the beginning of the action, they compassionately took up as they were swimming about) did not think fit to pursue far, but retired to Solebay, having purchased the victory with considerable loss; for they had four 6 hundred men and eight captains flain or drowned in the fight, and about feven thousand wounded. The (x) Bur-Dutch had fuffered so extreamly, that they presently cheet's Nafued for a peace, and were glad to accept it on Crom- val History, well's own terms (x).' The principal conditions of Fol. Lond. this peace, concluded April 5, 1654, were, 'That 1720, neither of the two republics should give reception, fuccour, protection, or affistance to the enemies, or . rebellious subjects of the other; that the freedom of navigation and commerce should be restored saving all the laws and flatutes of either commonwealth respectively] between the two nations, who obliged themselves, reciprocally, to defend each others ships in case they were attacked by any other power; but the superiority of the flag was entirely yielded to England, and the Dutch men of war were to ffrike their colours to the English, upon all occasions. The republic of the United-Provinces, obliged herself to profecute and punish the authors of the massacre of Ambyna, if they were yet alive; and to fend commiffioners to London to adjust the disputes of the several India companies of both nations, and to fettle the amount of the loss sustained by the English in the. East Indies, Brazil, Muscovy, and Greenland, &c. that restitution might be made by the States-General; and if the commissioners appointed by the two nations should not be able to adjust the points in difpute, then the decision of them was to be left to the · Swifs

the right of the British flag afferted, and fatif-

Swiss Cantons, who were pitched upon for arbitrators. The King of Denmark after a great deal of difficulty on the part of Gromwell, was included in the treaty as an ally of Holland, the States-General engaging to make good the losses that the English merchants had fustained by the seizure that prince had made of their ships in the port of Copenhagen. Lastly, in order to render the alliance firm and lasting, the States-General promised not to confer the supream command

(y) Bur-rish's Ba-P. 530. 8vo. Lond. 1728. And Mercurius Politicus, No. 203, 204. P. 3457-3462.

run's Ba-tavia illuf. 6 of their forces, either by fea or land, upon any per-trata, vol. ii. 6 fon who would not oblige himfelf by oath to an exe act observation of the treaty (y). The province of Holland, by a separate article, engaged never to permit the Prince of Orange to be stadtholder, or any of his descendants. The other provinces, against their wills, afterwards did the like. Mr. Hume has added, 'That eighty-five thousand pounds were stipulated to be paid by the Duich East India company for losses which the English company had sustained; and the island of Po-

Great Britain, vol. ii. P. 55.

(z) Hist. of e lerone in the East Indies was promised to be yielded to the latter (z). Nothing of this appears in the treaty itself. Mr. Burrish, however, informs us, 'That the Dutch complied very exactly with the terms of the treaty, and fent commissioners into England within the Iimited time, who agreed to restore the isle of Polerone, to make fatisfaction to the heirs and executors of those who had been massacred at Ambayna, and to furnish nine hundred thousand livres, at two payments, (a) Batavia by way of composition, for all the pretensions England

' might hitherto have against them (a).'

illustrata, vol. ii. p.

533.

Cromwell carried things with an high hand during this whole affair. The Dutch deputies were plainly told, · That if the treaty was not figned before their departure from hence, and mutual engagements passed for the ratification thereof within a time now to be agreed upon, his highness doth declare, that he shall not hold himself obliged thereunto to any the parts thereof, fatisfaction stipulated for the murders at Amboyna.

but shall account the treaty to be at an end (b). And (b) Thurby the treaty the States-General were to pay down in loe, vol. i. London 5000 l. sterling, towards the charges of the mer- p. 607. chants in going to Denmark about their goods and effects detained there; 20000 rix-dollars to such of them as Oliver should appoint on their arrival in Denmark, for repairing their ships and fitting them for fea; and caution and fecurity was to be given also by fufficient men, living in London, that restitution should be made by the States-General for the damages done by Denmark to the merchants. This fecurity was 140,000 l. sterling; the States gave a bond to fome merchants for the above fum, and the ambassadors were forced to give them ano- (c) Id. vol. ther for 20,000 l. more to fave them harmless (c). ii. p. 247. The peace was proclaimed at London April 17, 1654. with great folemnity: after which the ambaffadors were entertained at dinner by the Protector; the music playing all the while. 'The Lord Protector, adds the ambaffador, (from whose relation I give this) had us into another room, where the Lady Protectrice and others came to us, where we had also music and voices, and a Pfalm fung, which his highness gave us, and told us, that it was yet the best paper that had been exchanged between us (d). Cromwell was careful to 257. act still in character.—I have observed in the text, that this peace has not wanted censurers. Mr. Ludlow feems to blame it, because there was no provision made. by this treaty for the coalescence so much insisted upon during the administration of affairs by the parliament (e); (e) Vol. ii. Mr. Stubbe for its leaving undecided the fovereignty of $\begin{align*} \text{.487} \\ \text{.487} \\ \text{the feas, and the rights of the fishery (f); and we are told justificathat Moncke resented it 'as a base treachery in Cromwell, to tion, p. 66. make a sudden peace with the Dutch, and betray all the advantages of the war, that he might go up to the (g) Gum-throne with more peace and fatisfaction (g). To all ble's Life of Monck, p. which I may add that Mr. Burrish observes, That 74. " Cromwell's acceptation of the exclusion of the young boyna. On this occasion medals were struck by the Dutch, and poetical panegyrics (ccc)

Prince of Orange, in lieu of the coalition, is an unde-' niable' proof, that he demanded the latter, from a motive of self-interest; because, says he, I dare affirm,

(b) Batavia illuftrata. vol. ii. p. 529.

(i) Milton's Profe

Works, vol.

11. p. 201.

it could not be the interest of the nation to abolish the office of stadtholder (b). The reader will make his own remarks on these censures. I will close this note with observing, that the parliament had drawn out a fummary of the damages fustained by the English company in the East Indies from the Dutch East India company, and had made the fum total 1,681,9961. 15s. (i) Probably, they had not confidered the Dutch claims on the English at that time.

(ccc) Medals were struck by the Dutch, and poetical panegyrics made on Oliver.] The Dutch struck three medals on this joyful occasion. These medals reprefented.

1. Nepjune on a car, drawn by two fea-horses. The shields of arms of England and Holland, borne on his knees; on each fide of him a Triton swimming; and on the top a Caduceus, which supports Mercury's winged hat between too branches of a palm.-Round the medal is a verse from Terence, altered thus, Amantium Ira Amicitiæ Redintegratio eft .- On the reverse was this inscription in Dutch, - In memory of the peace, union. and folemn confederacy concluded at Westminster, April 15, between his highness the Lord Protector of the commonwealth of England, Scotland, and Ireland, and their High Mightinesses the States-General of the United Provinces; of which the ratifications were duly exchanged by both parties, May 2, and published the 27th of the same month, in the year 1654, N. S.

Two women fitting together, jointly supporting a hat, as an emblem of the liberty of the two republies. The English dame bears on her knees a harp, and the Dutch has a Belgic Iyon couching at her feet.

in praise of Oliver were composed by some

' Mentibus unitis priscus procul absit Amaror,

· Pilea ne subito parta Cruore ruant.

On the exergue.

" Conclusa decimo quinto Aprilis, anno 1654."

Reverse.

Two ships, one carrying the colours of Holland, and the other that of the States.

Luxuriat gemino nexu tranquilla Salo res,

' Excipit unanimes totius orbis amor.'

3. The figures of Peace and Justice, with their emblems.

"Hæ mihi erunt artes."

Reverse.

Quod fœlix faustumque sit. Post atrox Bellum, quod inter Anglica Belgicaque reipublica rectores, bis frustra tentatis pacis conditionibus, anno 1654 exarsit, ' in quo maximis utrinque Classibus, sex Septentrionali, 6 duo Mediterraneo Mari, pugnata funt cruenta prælia, Dei Optimi Maximi Beneficio, Auspiciis Olivarii, · Magnæ Britanniæ Protectoris, Fæderati Belgii Ordi-' num, Pax cum antiquo Fædere restituta; cujus optimæ rerum in memoriam sempiternam senatus popu- (k) Parlia-' lusque Amstelodamensis hoc monumentum sieri cura-mentary History, vol.

f runt (k).'

I have mentioned poetical panegyrics above. now are to be given an account of. It had been, as it yet is, the custom for the universities of this kingdom. to compose poems in different languages to celebrate the inaugurations and the illustrious actions of princes. Among these latter, the settlement of peace and friendship upon honourable and beneficial terms, with a nation with whom they contended, has ever justly been deemed most glorious. Inasmuch as the end thereby is accom-

of both universities, whose names stand in the accomplished, and the blood and treasure of the people preserved, as well as their ease and safety secured.

On fuch an occasion, therefore, as the peace with the Dutch, it was but natural for the muses to exult. And, in fact, they did it. The most learned men, the best geniuses, and those who afterwards made the greatest figure in the literary world, joined in celebrating this glorious event. The verses composed at Cambridge were published there, with the following title; 'Oliva Pacis. Ad Illustrissimum Celsissimumque Oliverum, Reipub. Angliæ, Scotiæ, & Hiberniæ Dominum Pro-(1) Ex cele- c tectorem; de Pace cum Fæderatis Belgis feliciter sanberrimæ Academiæ Tycita, Carmen Cantabrigiense (1).' Dr. Seaman, vicechancellor, introduces them to his highness in a poem, of which the following lines make a small part.

pographeo. 4to. 1654.

> Des veniam; nomen, Dax invictissime, vestrum Nostris inscriptum versibus esse sinas. Te Protectorem Respublica nostra salutat Te Dominum, domino tu mihi major eris. Quam facile est, Olivere, tuum grandescere nomen, Si meritis titulos accumulare licet. Primus Marte, nec Arte minor, pietate fecundus Nulli, Militiæ gloria, Pacis amor.

Te Duce, solennes agit Anglia læta triumphos,

Juncto cum Batavis fœdere tuta magis.

Among the names subscribed to the poems that follow after, are Arrowsmith, Tuckney and Horton, men of fame in their own days; then come those of Whichcot, and Cudworth, whose fame still survives, and whose writings render them immortal. Dillingham, Duport, Worthington, Wray [Ray] Gliffon, and Bright, eminent for their skill in various branches of learning, bear a part in the collection, besides a variety of others, now little known or regarded.

The

the first rank among the learned.—Cromwell, I know, has been almost universally blamed for breaking with Spain, and allying him-

The university of Oxford addressed his highness likewife. The book, in which their poems are contained, is entitled, ' Musarum Oxoniensium 'ΕΛΑΙΟΦΟΡΙ'A. · Sive, ob Fredera, Auspiciis Serenissimi Oliveri Reipub: Ang. Scot. & Hiber. Domini Protectoris, inter Rempub. Britannicam & Ordines Fœderatos Belgii Fæliciter Stabilita, Gentis Togatæ ad vada Isidis Ce- (m) Oxonia, Leusina Metricum (m). The dedication to this 4to. 1654: piece is in prose by Dr. Owen, vice-chancellor, and is full of expressions of gratitude to Oliver for his favours to, and protection of the university. After which we have a copy of verses by the same hand, and a great variety of others in feveral languages by different pens. Zouch, doctor of the civil law, Harmer, greek-profeffor, and Dr. Ralph Bathurft, names well known in the republic of letters, contributed to this collection, and joined in celebrating the protector. Besides these, we find here the names of Bufby (who so long ruled in Westminster school, and complied with every change of government in his time) and Locke: the poem of the latter I will here insert, as it may, I am persuaded, be acceptable to the learned reader.

Pax regit Augusti, quem vicit Julius orbem: Ille sago sactus clarior, ille toga. Hos sua Roma vocat magnos & numina credit, Hic quod sit mundi victor, & ille quies. Tu bellum et pacem populis des, unus utrisq; Major es; ipse orbem vincis, & ipse regis. Non hominem è cœlo missum Te credimus; unus Sic poteras binos qui superare deos!

I will only add some lines out of Mr. afterwards Dr. South's poem, in the same collection.

himself to France; whether justly (DDD) or no.

-Tu Dux pariter Terræ Domitorg; profundia Componant laudes cuncta elementa tuas. Cui mens alta subest pelagog; profundior ipso, Cujus fama fonat, quam procul unda fonat.

Tu poteras solus motos componere fluctus, Solus Nertunum sub tua vincla dare. Magna simul fortis vicisti & multa: Trophæis Ut mare, sic pariter cedit arena tuis. Nomine Pacifico gestas infignia pacis, Blandag; per titulos serpit Oliva tuos.

Would any one think this panegyrift should afterwards, in print, stile Cromwell 'a lively copy of Fero-

(n) South's Seimons, vol i. p. 169. Evo. Lond. 1692.

boam (n)?' or have the face to fay of the ruling ecclefiaftics of these times, that Latin was with them a mortal crime, and Greek, instead of being owned for the language of the Holy Ghost (as in the New " Testament it is) was looked upon as the fin against it; fo that, in a word, they had all the confusions of 6 Babel amongst them without the diversity of (a) Id. Vol. 6 tongues (a)?' But this was Dr. South. iii. P. 544. volume is closed with some verses from the printer to his highness the lord protector. This was Leonard Liebfield, esquire, bedle of divinity, as he stiles himself. He lived to perform the fame honour to Charles II. as did many of the gentlemen above mentioned. For praise, for the time, follows fortune; and he who has the power of conferring benefits will never want flatterers. --- We see, however, from hence, that Cromwell had equal honours paid him at home as well as abroad, with our kings; which was no unacceptable thing, we may affure ourselves, to so ambitious a mind as his, who fought greedily for fame, and was willing to perpetuate his name by deeds of renown.

> (DDD) Cromwell has been blamed for his breach with Spain and alliance with France; but whether juftly, &c.]

no, may be questioned, notwithstanding the num-

Instead of amusing the reader with the uncertain conjectures of various writers, on this very important subject, I will give him Mr. Thurloe's account of the negotiations between England, France and Spain, as far as they relate to Oliver; then will naturally follow the censures past on his conduct, which will produce some observations tending to the protector's justification.

"Upon Cromwell's assuming the government, Don " Alonso de Cardenas, the Spanish ambassador then re-' fiding in London, after making the general compliments in the high strain, mentioned in the note (AAA), came to particular propositions on the part of Spaynes propounding a conjunction between England and Spayne against France, upon two grounds: 1. To bring France to a good peace, and thereby to obtain reft and quiet to all Christendome, which was miserably embroiled through the ambition of France, who would listen to no reasonable terms of peace, unless they were constrained thereto; and the most likely and visible means to effect that was, by the united counsels and forces of England and Spayne. 2. In this peace the establishment of Oliver in the govern-6 ment of these nations should be provided for, and e particularly fecured, against the clayme and title of his now Majesty [Charles II.]; propounding, that one of the articles of the peace should be to defend 6 Oliver in the aforefaid government, declaring that Spayne would never lay downe their arms, nor make e peace with France, till that crowne also would agree thereto; by which means the standing of Oliver would be made firm and stable, having, besides his own interest here, two of the chiefest crownes of Europe to fupport and strengthen him: making mention here, by way of inducement, and to perswade that Spa ne ' was real, and in good earnest in this particular, of the great disobligations, that the late King had put upon the King of Spayne, and the ill dealing he had re-B b 2 number and quality of the censurers. For the ceived from him in feveral rencounters, which his · Majesty of Stayne did so much resent, that there could e never be any confidence again between Stayne and that family; nor would it be the interest of Spayne, that any of that lyne should be restored to this government. Thence concluding, that Oliver could not relye in this matter, upon any prince or flate in Europe, fo much as upon Spayne, labouring, at the same itime, to render the alliance with France not only use-· less but dangerous, save in the way before expressed; . wherein the treaty might be so ordered, that if France 6 did break any of the articles, in prejudice of Oliver, or his government in England, Spayne would be obliged to join with Ergland for the making good thereof. The particulars which he defired of England in this conjunction against France, was at first only four thoufand foldiers to serve with the Spanish army, and twelve ships of war to be joined with their fleet in the defigns they had against France about Bourdeaux. This proposition came afterwards to an entire English army of horse and foot, that might be able to march in any part of France. And as to the charge of transporting and keeping fuch an army, Don Alonso propounded (as I remember) that Spayne should bear two third parts, and the like of the fleet, which be-6 ing computed, he was willing to pay part downe, and fo much yearly, as long as this war should con-6 tinue.

At the same time arrived here monsieur Ligné from the prince of Cinde, besides monsieur Barriere, that was here also, and some deputies from the town of Bourdeaux, offering reasons for a war against France, and

e propounding defigns relating to Bourdeaux, and the parts thereabouts, wherein England might engage (as they thought) with great advantage; and this part was also managed by Den Alongo.

· Thefe

the inequality between the two crowns was

• These propositions were communicated to Oliver by those who met Don Alonso thereupon; but his own inclinations being not for any conjunction with Spanne, they were only therefore discoursed of, but the answere thereunto was delayed.

fwere thereunto was delayed. France, during this time, did also make knowne by monfieur Bourdeaux their defires of holding a good ' understanding with Oliver, and sounded his inclinations of a nearer conjunction with France, and monfieur de Baas was fent immediately from the cardinall, ' and as his confident, to affure Oliver of his particular fervice. And both the one and the other did express the defires that France had of entering into a league defensive and offensive with England, and of proceeding by joint counfels towards Spanne; and that if England will either joyne their arms to France, or ' make war against Spayne upon their own bottom, they would contribute to the charge; defiring, in the ' mean tyme, that the former treatys between these two states may be renewed. To all this general anfwers were given, expressing very good intentions towards France; and I do not remember, that any thing more particular was faid at this time, nor dur-' ing all the time that monfieur de Baas flayed here; who was commanded to depart this country, upon intelligence, that he had intrigues here with feveral e persons, tending to the publick disturbance.

• Don Alonso receiving no answer to his propositions, and perceiving a coldness in that business, signified to Oliver, that the intention of his master was not to engage England in a war against France, in case the present government sound it not to be for their own interest; but that his chief hope was to maintaine a constant good intelligence with England. And therefore propounded, that the former alliances may be renewed, as the first step towards a nearer union. Accordingly commissioners were assigned to treat with far enough from being then as visible as it

B b 3 'him

him thereupon, and feverall conferences there were ' upon the concept of a treaty, mostly drawne out of the treaty of 1630. Amongst other difficulties these three following were the chief. 1. Touching the West-Indies, the debate whereof was occasioned upon the first article of the aforesaid treaty of 1630, whereby it is agreed, that there should be a peace, amity and friendship between the two Kings, and their respective subjects, in all parts of the world, s as well in Europe as elsewhere. Upon this it was flewed, that, in contravention of this article, the English were treated by the Spanyards as enemies, wherever they were met in America, though fayling to and from their owne plantations; and infifted that fatisfaction was to be given in this, and a good foundation of friendship lay'd in those parts for the future between their respective subjects (the English there being very confiderable, and whose safety and interest the government here ought to provide for) or else there could be no solid or lasting peace established between these two states in Europe.

' 2. The fecond difference was touching the inquisition, the danger whereof all our English merchants, trading in Spayne, were exposed to. And in that it was defired, that out of the article, which related to the English merchants exercise of their religion in

Spayne, those words might be omitted (mode ne dent ' fcandalum) and that liberty might be granted to the

' faid merchants to have and use in Spayne English Bibles, and other religious books. To these two Don

" Alonso was pleased to answer, That to ask a liberty

from the inquisition, and free fayling in the West-Indies, was to ask his master's two eyes; and that nothing could be done in these points, but according to the practice of former times.

6 3. The third difference was in relation to some particulars of trade, as the King's decrying and advancing afterwards appeared; and Cromwell always his coin, to the infinite prejudice of the English,

· The debates upon these articles gave no great satisfaction to either fide, nor increased the confidence, but rather shewed, that the principles of England and Spayne, at that time, were very different, and that it would be hard to make their interests to agree. the fame time there were feveral conferences also with the French ambassador, upon a treaty with France upon the ground of the former alliances. Then it came ' into debate before Oliver, and his councill, with which of these crowns an alliance was to be chosen. Oliver ' himself was for a war with Spayne, at least in the " West-Indies, if satisfaction were not given for the past damages, and things well fettled for the future. And ' most of the council went the same way, and inclined ' to hold good intelligence with France; and some of ' the reasons for this opinion were:

for the france, to his Majesty, to wit, that by entertaining a good and confident correspondence with France, the King of England and his brother might be removed out of France, and thereby a perpetual enmity stated between his said Majesty and the King of France; and so all hopes of his restitution by successive from France taken away. And France was looked upon as the only foreign power that Oliver

e need confider as to the King's restitution. For,

'1. Their relation in blood might incline them to it, and the treatyes upon the match would give them greater pretences to restore the King than any other state could have.

⁶ 2. They could employ in this fervice, and engage ⁶ in it the protestants of France, which might very dan-

' geroully divide us at home.

the French and the Scots, which the French constantly made use of as a back-door into England; and, as af-

had it in his power to break loofe, and throw fairs stood in Scotland, it would not be hard to set all in a stame there. And, although it was supposed, that if his Majesty were excluded France, he would betake himself to Spayne, yet this was not thought dangerous; because his being in Spayne seemed rather disadvantageous to his returne than otherwise, the English being always jealous and afraid of the principles of Spayne, and who had no interest here but the papist; the presbyterian party, whom Oliver was desirous enough to engage in his affairs, having ever shewed the greatest aversion to the Spanyard.

4. In the next place, an ill understanding with France lay contrary to the amity with Sweden, which Oliver defired always to cherish upon several considerations.

5. A good intelligence there was thought fafer for the protestants there than a war. So it was resolved to take all opportunities to maintayn a good underflanding with France, and to fend a fleet and land forces into the West-Indies, where it was taken for granted the peace was already broken by the Spa-nyard, contrary to the former treatyes; and not to · meddle with any thing in Europe, until the Spanyard fhould begin, unless the American fieet should be met with, which was looked upon as lawful prize. And onow the confideration was of joining with France in this war upon the grounds aforesaid, which France offered to do. And a treaty there was touching a fquadron of ships to join with the French as auxilie aryes only to France, that so no breach might be in · Europe with Spayne on the part of England; as also a fum of money was propounded to be given by France, ' in case England will declare war against Spayne in any e part of the world. But many difficulties and delays falling out in this treaty, the fleet was fent away into the West-Indies. And a war followed thereupon between England and Spayne, without the least com-· munication throw himself into the opposite scale, if circum-

munication of counfels with France, whereby France had its end for nothing. Then arrives here the marquis de Leda, as extraordinary ambassador from Spaine, expressing desires of renewing the peace, but returned re infecta. And now there was no more discourse of a league defensive and offensive with France, which the councill were never for; but the former peace was renewed with fome alterations, in respect of the prefent tyme, which is in print; and an article by itfelf for exclusion of his Majesty, his highnesse the duke of Yorke, presently, and his highnesse the duke of Gloucester after ten years, with some other persons e particularly named, out of France. This was all that ' passed between Oliver and the king or cardinall of France, for some years, save very civil messages and affurances of mutuall services, as occasion should be. ' In the mean tyme Oliver cast with himself how to e get footing on the continent, which he always much 6 longed for. And there was a defigne to have drawne Flanders to revolt from Spayne; and, to that end, to have dealt with some of the great towns to have declared themselves a commonwealth, under the pro-tection of the prince of Gönde; and he was to be founded in it, how he would inclyne thereto, if England and France did affift hym therein, and fo, by that means, to have fatisfyed Conde to live out of France, and to have eased the cardinall of the feare of his returne. But proper mediums being not found out to found the prince of Conde, and it being not relished in France, it was no further prosecuted.

Afterwards there were propositions of joining in the war against the Spanyard in Flanders, whereupon there was a treaty made in the year 1657. The effect was, that Oliver should send into France or Flanders 6000 foot, 3000 at the charge of England, and 3000 at the charge of France; that the whole being landed, should come under the pay of France. That with these, and a French army of horse and soot, the king should that yeare cumstances should alter. But, be this as it may, besiege Graveling or Dunkirk; and either being taken, to deliver it with all the forts into the English hands, viz. Dunkirk absolutely, and Graveling by way of caution, until Dunkirk should be taken and delivered. That the priviledges of the town and the religion fhould remayne in the same state as before; and that ono peace or truce be made with Spayne by either during that yeare. The French that year took only Mardyke fort, so that the treaty was in February 1657-8 renewed for another yeare; and, according thereto, Dunkirk was taken and put into the English hands. Further treaties were intended for the joint management of the war in Flanders, but the death of Oliver prevented it (p).'--- These were the motives of Cromwell's preferring the friendship of France, and making war with Spain, of which the intelligent reader will form his own judgment. The world, for the most part, however, has blamed his conduct in this affair, as will appear by the following quotations. 'Cromwell,' favs Mr. Bethell (for he, I believe, was the author of the World's Mistake in Oliver Cromwel) 'contrary to our ' interest, made an unjust war with Spain, and an imopolitic league with France, bringing the first thereby under, and making the latter too great for Christendome; and, by that means, broke the ballance betwixt the two crowns of Spain and France, which his predecessors, the long parliament, had always wisely preserved. In this dishonest war with Spain, he pretended and endeavoured to impose a belief on the world, that he had nothing in his eye, but the advancement of the protestant cause, and the honour of the nation; but his pretences were either fraudulent, or he was gignorant in foreign affairs (as I am apt to think, that he was not guilty of too much knowledge in them.) For he that had known any thing of the temper of the Popish prelacie, and the French court-policies, could not but fee, that the way to increase, or pre-

French army of horse and foot, the king should that yeare

may, honour and profit accrued hereby to ferve, the reformed interest in France, was by rendering the protestants of necessary use to their King; for, that longer than they were fo, they could not be free from perfecution, and that the way to render them so, was by keeping the ballance betwixt Spain and France even, as that which would consequently make them useful to their King: but by overthrowing the ballance in his war with Spain, and joining with France, he freed the French King from his fears of Spain, enabled him to subdue all factions at home, and thereby to bring himself into a condition of not flanding in need of any of them, and from thence hath proceeded the perfecution that hath fince been. and still is, in that nation, against the reformed there; 6 fo that Oliver, instead of advancing the reformed interest, hath, by an error in his politicks, been the author of destroying it. The honour and advantage he propounded to this nation in his pulling down of Spain, had as ill a foundation: for, if true, as was ' said, that we were to have had Oftend and Newport, ' fo well as Dunkirk, (when we could get them) they bore no proportion, in any kind, to all the rest of the King of Spain's European dominions, which must neceffarily have fallen to the French King's share, because of their joining and nearness to him, and re-6 moteness from us, and the increasing the greatness of 6 fo near a neighbour, must have increased our future dangers (q). Mr. Burrish, after mentioning the (q) The offers made to Cromwell from France and Spain, in or- Mistake, der to obtain his friendship, says, 'in these circum- &c. p. 4. flances, perhaps, the wifest course had been to have fate still, and entertained both sides in suspence, under favour of which the commerce of Great Britain could not fail to have flourished. But the protector was not easy at home. Some of those who had been the means of his elevation, either from envy, or a true republican principle, were become his enemies; the

the English nation, and such too as it has, and nation was accustomed to war, and seemed to take spleasure in it; all which induced Cromwell to break with fome of his neighbours, that he might find employment abroad for those busy spirits, which, if left at home, would certainly have engaged in popular commotions. Thus the protector having refolved a war from a motive of felf-interest, the same principle. made him prefer the alliance of France to that of Spain; because Phillip IV. was neither so redoubtable an enemy as Lewis XIV. nor for capable of ferving formwell in the quality of a friend. The principal dominions of Spain were fituated at a great distance from England; and, as to the naval power of that & crown, which had lately been the terror of the universe, sit was now fo reduced, that when, in confequence of the forementioned treaty, monfieur de Turenne formed the flege of Dunkirk with the confederate troops of France and England, a small squadron of English ships ferved to block up the port, and prevent the garrison from receiving any relief by fea. In these circumflances the Spaniards run a very great risque of having their flota fall into the hands of the English, and to - this we may add; that the ill condition of their affairs in the West-Indies, gave the protector hopes of - rannexing Hiftaniola to the dominions of Great Britain. But this weakness of the Spaniards, which invited Gronwell into the war, and feemed to affure him of fluccels, was a very firong reason-why he ought not to have broke with them; because he could not conti-* nue to depres the crown of Stain without destroying the equality of power, that ought to subsist between the feveral great states of Europe, and elevating France to fuch an exorbitant degree, as would enable her to lord it at pleasure over all her neighours. The protector knew this extremely well, and there are tho e who have affirmed, that, before his death, he had taken a resolution to reconcile himself with the court of Madrid. · After and yet continues to enjoy. For though the

After having acquired Dunkirk and Jamaica, during his alliance with France, he had a mind to possess himself of Calais by the assistance of the Spaniards; but, as he did not live to effect this, he left the French (r) Batavia e very great gainers by the measures they had taken vol. ii. p. with him (r).' Lord Bolingbroke censures Oliver in 483. strong terms likewise. Hear him. 'Cromwell either did not difcern, favs his lordship, this turn of the bal-' lance of power [from Spain to France] --- or, difcerning it, he was induced by reasons of private interest to act against the general interest of Europe. · Cromwell joined with France against Spain, and tho' he got Jamaica and Dunkirk, he drove the Spaniards into a necessity of making a peace with France, that has disturbed the peace of the world almost fourscore e years, and the consequences of which have well nigh beggared in our times the nation he enflaved in his. I here is a tradition, I have heard it from persons who lived in those days, and, I believe, it came from · Thurloe, that Cromwell was in treaty with Spain, and ready to turn his arms against France, when he died. If this fact was certain, as little as I honour his memory, I should have some regret that he died so soon. But whatever his intentions were, we must charge the Pyrenean treaty, and the fatal consequences of it, in great measure, to his account. The Spaniards abhorred the thought of marrying their Infanta to Lewis "XIV. It was on this point that they broke the nee gotiation Lianne had begun: and your lordship will e perceive, that if they refumed it afterwards, and offered the marriage they had before rejected, Crom- (1) Letters well's league with France was a principal inducement on the study and use of to this alteration of their refolution (s). -- Mr. Hume history, vol. joins in the cry against Cromwell, and peremptorily de- i. p. 2; $. clares, 'That, if he had understood and regarded the in- 8vo. Lond. terest of his country, he would have supported the declining condition of Spain against the dangerous

the expedition to Hispaniola, under the joint ambition of France, and preserved the ballance of power, on which the greatness and security of Engiand so much depends. Had he studied only his own interests, he would have maintained an exact neutrality betwixt these two great monarchies; nor would he ever have hazarded his ill acquired and unsettled power, by provoking foreign enemies, who might lend assistance to domestick faction, and overturn his tottering throne. But his magnanimous courage undervalued danger: his active disposition and avidity of dervalued danger: his active disposition and avidity of extensive glory made him incapable of repose (t).'-These are the principal objections to Cromwell's entering into the war with Spain, and leaguing with France: objections it must be owned at this diltance of time, and in our view of things, extreamly plaufible, but which possibly would have been deemed but of little force had they been urged when these important affairs were under deliberation. For let it be considered that Cromwell was at liberty to wage war with Spain, on account of its cruelties to the English in America, and the restrictions laid on their commerce. To avenge innocent blood, procure fatisfaction for injuries past, and security for the time to come, is worthy a fovereign, and merits praise from all ---- Again; with France the Protector had no quarrel. Culais was too old an affair to ground a war on; and the making use of it as a pretence for it, would have been deemed ridiculous and unjust .- France, 'tis true, was capable of hurting Otiver more than Spain; but it must be very idle to make it criminal in him to prefer her friendship for that among other reasons. 'Tis sufficient the public good is not facrificed to private interest: to expect men in power, how wife and good foever, will have no regard to their own prefervation and fafety, is perhaps too much. I do not remember many instances of it in latter times. But the great objection we fee is, the ballance of power between the two crowns was by Cromwell's means broken, and

(t) Hiftory of Great Britain, vol. ii. p. 65.

OLIVER CROMWELL.

joint command of Pen and Venables, through and France thereby enabled to give the law to Chriftendom. But Oliver, I presume, must be acquitted on this head, if it appears that it was imagined at that time that the ballance was on the fide of Spain; that in fact the two crowns were much nearer on an equality than the objectors suppose; that Cromwell kept it in his power to turn the scale as he thought fit; and that the Pyrenean treaty in reality placed the two crowns in proper fituations with respect to each other, and to their neighbours.

1. Spain was not then viewed in that weak state which she afterwards appeared. Cromwell's parliaments were not over complaifant to him, nor prone to approve his actions meerly as such. Yet the parliament, says Mr. Thurloe in a letter to general Montague, dated Whitehall, October 25, 1656, declared themselves cordially and unanimously concerning the Spanish war, having after two days debate declared their approbation thereof nemi- (u) Orne contradicente: and this before they heard one titt'e of monde's your fuccess (u).' The same gentleman writing to the State Pageneral, August 28, preceding, says, The Spaniard pers, vol. ii. hath had great success in Flanders this year against the French. To that of raising the siege of Valenciennes, he had added the taking of Conde, and is very likely to lodge himself this year in France; so that the car-

6 dinal hath not been able to draw any army to the feacoast, as was intended, being scarce able to defend his (x) Id. p. ' own country (x).'

2. There was not in fact that inequality between the two crowns which the objectors suppose. It is well known that through several preceding reigns, 'twas the house of Austria only had been formidable; that injured our royal family in the Palatinate; and alone threatned the liberties of Europe. France had not yet given occasion to her neighbours to fear. A long war had been now carried on between the two crowns, with various success. If Spain was weakned by the revolt of Portugal and Catalonia, 'tis certain France was distracted with domestic contentions even in Paris itself, as well as other parts of the kingdom: contentions the more dangerous, as persons of the most elevated rank and greatest power were concerned in them. So that Spain carried on the war on a foot of equality, not of defence. If the Prince of Conde had cut off their best veterans at Recrey, he now himself headed their troops with the acknowledged reputation of being the best general in Europe, though Turenne figured in the field, and had performed deeds of renown.—This equality is visible through several campaigns; but the raising of the siege of Arras on one fide, and that of Valenciennes on the other, proves it beyond doubt; to which may be added, that even after the taking of Mardyke in pursuance of the league with England, by Turenne, the French met with several losses (y). We seem therefore to deceive ourselves with our after knowledge, when we blame Gromwell for overturning the ballance of power.

(y) Ramfay's Life of Turenne, vol. i. p. 303. 8vo. Lond. 1735.

3. It should be observed, that Gromwell held the ballance of power in his own hands the more firmly, by his French league. We see from Thurle's account with what caution he engaged in it. The treaty was but for a year, 'till Dunkirk should be conquered for England by the help of France, and when Cromwell had got it, he was at liberty, if he saw fit, at the end of that year to make a peace with Spain, and use this very town against France. The English troops conquered little or nothing for the French crown; but France by giving England a footing on the continent just on the confines of the two contending parties, enabled it to hold the ballance of power fo much the more steadily between them, and become so much the more formidable to France as well as Spain. He found the scales even, and in posfesting himself of Dunkirk, he made the French give him hold of the handle of the ballance to keep them for

If any after this, should condemn Cromwell for weakning the Spaniards by making this conquest of Dunkirk, what must they think of Charles II. who by the advice of his chancellor Hyde sold it to France, and thereby threw threw fo great a weight into that scale, which then appeared more manifestly to preponderate.

4. The Pyrenean treaty placed the two crowns in proper fituations with respect to each other, and to their neighbours. - In the treaty between the Emperor, Spain, and Holland in 1673, the States-General stipulated to ' make no peace with France' till the Catholic King was put in possession of all that his most Christian Mae jesty had taken in the Low Countries since the peace of the Pyrenees.' In the grand alliance between the Emperor, England and Holland, in 1689, it was agreed, That no peace should be made with France, till the peace of Westphalia, Osnabrug, Munster, and the Pyrenean were by the help of God, and common force vindicated, and all things restored to their former condition, according to the tenor of the same.' And King William III. when Prince of Orange, though justly warmed with resentment against France, declared, That whenever Spain paffed the bounds of the Pyre- (2) See Sir e nean treaty, he would become as good a Frenchman as Wm Tema he was then a Spaniard (2).' These facts I think moirs, p. fully shew, the Pyrenean treaty to have been well cal- 123. 8vo. culated for the repose of Europe, and for the advantage of the contracting powers. However, it was not Cromwell's league that produced this treaty and its fatal confequences, as Lord Bolingbroke fuggests. The proposal of giving the infanta to Lewis XIV. was rejected by Spain, when there was no other heir to that throne; it (a) See Tus was accepted when a fon was born to afcend it (a). renne's Life, The confequences of this marriage were indeed fatal to vol. i. p. Europe. But they arose from the ill conduct of Spain, and the injustice, ambition, and perjury of Lewis, who with the zeal of a bigot, the superstition of a priest, and the fenfuality of an epicurean, delighted in facrificing the blood of millions, to his own foolish idea of glory. I will conclude this note with observing that Cromwell's irrefolution and delay in choosing his fide in the war feem justly censurable; more especially as he neglected to close in with the offers made him by France, even after he had determined, and fent his fleet for the West Indies. Bourdeaux, the French embassador's letters, a variety of causes was (EEE) unsuccessful; and are full of the delays he met with in his negotiation for this purpose; and Mr. Thurles points out the wrong measures taken on this occasion, when he says above, France offered a fum of money, in case England would declare war against Spain in any part of the world; but many difficulties and delays falling out in this treaty, the fleet was fent away into the West Indies, and a war followed thereupon between England and ' Spain, without the least communication of counsells with France, whereby France had its end for nothing." (EEE) The expedition to Hispaniola miscarried.] Cromwell's instructions to general Venables, commander of the land forces fent to America, are to be feen in Burcheit. From these it appears that no particular place was the object of their destination, but much was left to the prudence of the commanders. Reasons are therein mentioned for attempting the islands, or leaving these, to attack the main land, more especially Carthagena; whereby, if conquered, they might be masters of the Spanish treasures which come from Peru by way of Panama in the South-Sea, to Porto Bello, or Nombre de dies (b) Burchett, in the North-Sea (b). But where, after all, the descent was to be made, the generals with the commissioners, or any two of them, were, on proper consultation, to determine. So that Lord Clarendon was much mistaken in faying, ' Their orders from Cremwell were very particular and very positive, that they should land at fuch a place, which was plainly enough described to them (c).' The fleet left England, December 19, 1654, and arrived at Barbadoes, January 29, 1654, O. S. Here it was supposed they should meet with many things they frood in need of. But their expectations were not answered. Even a sufficient quantity of arms and ammunition were wanting. ' A fad matter,' fays Venables in a letter to Montague, written from Barbadoes February 28, following, ' when we must attempt so high with little or nothing, or return home

p. 387.

(c) Vol. vi. p. 578.

OLIVER CROMWELL.

and subjected the nation to disgrace; yet the taking and do nothing! which few of us had a great deal 6 more chearfully hear the news of death than be guilty of.' The progress and ill success of the fleet and army, I will relate in the words of Venables. We left, fays he, Barbadoes the last of March, and came to St. · Christophers, where we found a regiment formed; and not staying to anchor, we failed thence without fetting foot on shore, and in a fortnight's time came to Hispaniola, where we landed upon Saturday the 14th of April, near forty miles to the west of Santo Domingo. The reason was, our pilots were all abfent; the chief had outstayed his order, being fent out to discover, and none with us fave an old Dutchman, that knew no place but that: whereas we resolved to have landed where Sir Francis Drake did, except forced off by a fort (said to be there;) and then in such a case to have gone to the other. From our landing we marched without any guide, fave heaven, through woods; the ways fo narrow, that 500 men might have extreamly prejudiced 20000 by ambushes; but this course the enemy held not, save twice. The weather extream hot, and little water; our feet fcorched through our shoes, and men and horse died of thirst: but if any had liquor put into their mouths, bresently after they fell, they would recover, else die ' in an instant. Our men the last fortnight at sea had bad bread, and little of it or other victuals, notwith-' standing general Penn's order; so that they were very weak at landing; and some, instead of three days pro-' vision at landing, had but one, with which they marched five days, and therefore fell to eat limes, oranges, e lemons, &c. which put them into fluxes and fevers. Of the former, I had my share for near a fortnight, with cruel gripings, that I could scarce stand. Col. Butler was ordered to land to the east of the city, but could not; and therefore he and the Christopher's ' regiment under col. Holdip were landed where we first Cc 2

taking and fettling of Jamaica, will always refolved, and were ordered by general Penn (whose order I enjoined them to obey) to flay there for us: but they marched away, which contrary to the first refolution, with fome other reasons, drew us beyond their landing (where we were to receive more victuals) to secure them who were straggling up and down for water. Which put the enemy upon placing of an ambush for them, which fell upon our forlorn and routed them; but the van immediately beat them back with loss, and pursued them near to the city walls, who shot at us. Victuals we wanted, having fasted two days every man of us; our ammunition fpent; no water; and our men ready to faint, and fome died; the eagerness and heat of fight had drawn them beyond their strength. Whereupon it was refolved by a council of war, to retreat for meat and ammunition; which we did; but our long march and this delay did give the enemy time to call in all the country to at least 4 or 5,000, and left our men, after travel by fea, bad diet, and fasting, very weak; so that when we advanced the next, they fell upon our forlorn again, routed them, and then in the narrow · lanes and thick woods routed mine and major general · Heane's regiments, flew my major and three of my captains, flew the major general, and wounded his lieutenant colonel, who is fince dead; and were not repulsed, till the regiment of seamen (with whom I was) gave stop to this disorder. Never did my eves pers, vol. ii. Gee men more discouraged, being scarce able to make ' them stand, when the enemy was retreated, who neloe, vol. iii. e ver looked upon us until we were ready to faint for water; they having (which I forgot to tell before) flopt Howard's ' up all their wells; fo that we had not of ten miles at collection of cleast, one drop of water (d).'-Mr. Daniel, audi-Letters, vol. tor general in this expedition, gives much the same ac-4.0. Lond. count; and then adds, I cannot omit to express something concerning this great business, which I am sure

(d) Ormonde's State Paalfo Thur-

the world will mistake in reportinge; but myself being a present eye-witness there on the place, and amongst the crowd, in the midst of danger, near maojor-general's person, I have not, neither shall I, relate any thing but what I know for certain truth. I know a threefold cord cannot be easily broken; but where they twist not equally together, they many times cut one another; and this I am fure, that in martial affairs, where commands execute like light-' nings, and those variable as the winds, according as the present emergency requires, and not for consent of others, to the loffe of all. I well know his highness would never submit, in all his past actions, to such curbs, nor can brave defigns ever succeed with such bridles, which I hope to fee amended.' This feems a fensible reflection on joining commissioners and the ad-; miral in authority with the general, and thereby rendring their advice and confent absolutely necessary in every affair. This was one unhappy cause of the ill succefs they met with, we may well enough suppose. Another was the dislike of the admiral and some of the sea officers, to the land forces, as the same gentleman hints in the following passage. 'The uncharitableness of our rear admiral, fays he, will not fuffer my filence; for by that time we were by order shipped from Hi/pa-" niola, he did furiously and most unchristian-like say; before good witness, where are these cowardly Spa-' niards now? Will they not come and cut off these army rogues, that we may noe more be troubled with them? And his own lieutenant, my former acquaintance, being by accident aboard the ship where I came into weak, and so ill not able to stand, after salutes and fome discourse, told me to my face (like to his profession) we were all overboard, that they might be e rid of us again; speaking the same words to capt. rid of us again; speaking the same words to capt. (e) Thurlos, Fincher, in his extremity of weakness, and also to vol. iii. p. others (e).

On the other hand, great complaint was made of general Venables. He was looked on as covetous and niggardly, and was possessed but of little esteem amongst (f) Id. p. the soldiery (f), having prohibited them from plundering 689.

be deemed as an effential fervice to (FFF)

Britain, and meriting the highest applause.

The

(g) Thurloe, vol. iii. p. 505.

on pain of death (g). A thing no way pleasing in such an expedition, where every man flattered himself with the hopes of making a fortune.—Such were the causes of the failure of the expedition to Hispaniola; causes which will always produce like effects. For unless there is unanimity of counsel, obedience to orders, considence in the commander, and sufficient store of provisions and ammunition, it can never be expected but that things will go amiss. It were well if this had been

(b) See Ac- that things will go amis. It were well if this had been count of the the only affair in which dishonor and disgrace had acSettlements crued to the nation through the disagreement of comin America, manders, and the envy and ill will of the land and sea
vol. ii. p. officers one towards another! Cromwell's genius did not

Lond, 1758, appear in planning this expedition (b).

(FFF) The taking and settling of Jamaica, was an effential service to Britain.] After the disgrace received by the English, as mentioned in the preceding note, the army was reduced to the greatest extremities. ' The rains increasing, says the auditor Daniel, our men weakining, all even unto death fluxing, the feamen aboard neglecting, that forced us to eat all our troop horses, (the enemy denying all relief, triumphing) and these miseries increasing, our council resolved by seeking God, to purge the army. First, Jackson [adjutants general] found guilty of cowardice, had his sword broken over his head for a coward, his commission taken away, and expulft the army, and to be fwabber to hospital ships of sick people, which was accordingly done. Some women found in mens apparel were puinished, and all suspected whores (Barbadoes and those plantations yielding few elfe) narrowly fought after; all officers and foldiers strictly commanded to observe duty, upon greatest pains; one of major-general (now Fortescue) soldiers, proved to run away, hanged; and indeed like a wife prudent general, all things by him

ordered; yet our fickness increasing, it was resolved

The attempt on Hispaniola quickly reached the ears of the Catholic King, who immediately

again to ship, and so directly for Jamaica (i).'- (i) Thurloe, Venables himself shall relate the success. 'Upon this sor, disafter and our mens fears we fell to new counsel, ' and resolved to try Jamaica (from which nothing diverted our first attempt, but that it wanted a name in the world, our men refusing to march again for Do-' mingo) where we landed (having beaten the enemy from off his forts and ordnance) upon the tenth of ' May; and find the country in our judgments equal, if onot superior, to Hispaniola; and in four miles march here, I faw more cattle and plantations than in forty in Hispaniola, and a better air, the fite more advantagious to intercept the Spanish Plate fleet. The Recovery and William of London are come to us with fome biscuit, which we extreamly want, but the fleet claim it as theirs; and then we starve: for the enemy here, after figning articles, have run into the woods, and drove away all the cattle into the mountains, and e left us nothing but hare walls and roots to shelter and ' feed upon. We are getting horse to make troopers and dragoons: and then we hope well, if the Lord bless a party we have sent forth under colonel Butler. The people have broke all their promises all along; but we have their governor and another principal man (k) Oras two hostages; they say the articles are too harsh (k). monde's All things at last however were settled, and Venables and Papers vol. Penn, between whom there was an ill understanding, and who had different parties even among the land forces, took the first opportunity of returning to England. Cromwell, greatly displeased at their whole conduct, and disappointed in his high hopes, we may well suppose was angry; and after hearing their mutual accusations and defences, committed them to the Tower. Certain it is, many of the officers complained greatly of Venables be (1) SceThur-haviour, both at Hispaniola and Jamaica (1). The Eng-loe, vol. iii. lish were no sooner known to be gone to this latter place, P. 646.755 Cc 4

diately thereupon seizing the persons and effects of the English merchants in his dominions, but an account was fent by Mr. Muddiford from Barbadoes; of its great utility and importance. It is apparently, fays he, in a letter dated June 20, 1655, (feeing they would have an island) far more proper for their purposes, than the other or Porto Rico, as the fituation in the maps will make more visible. It hath an excellent harbour, and is accounted the most 6 healthful and plentiful of them all. It will be fooner filled, and is far more convenient for attempts on the Spanish fleet, and more especially the Carthagena fleet, which must halt within fight of it, as they go to the Havannah. And believe it, this will more trouble the court of Spain than ten of the other; and therefore it must be expected more attempts will be by the Spa-' niards to supplant them. If therefore you have an opportunity, press his highness and the council to fend fpeedy and great supplies of men, arms, ammunition, and cloathes. I am confident that if this place be fully planted, which in three or four years may with ease be done, his highness may do what he will in the ' Indies (m).' Cromwell was fensible of its importance, and issued out a proclamation for the encouragement of all persons inclined to settle there, promising the erection of civil government; protection against enemies; exemption from customs for a certain number of years, and all other things requifite to induce men to transport themselves thither (n). Incredible were the hardships the first English planters, as well as the officers and soldiers met with in the beginning. But Cromwell was continually fending them relief, and doing every thing in his power to make them easy and happy (0). Nothing can more fully confirm this than the following letter written by him to major-general Fortescue, commander of the forces there, after the departure of general Venables:

(m) Thurloe, vol. iii. p. 565.

(a) Id. p. 733.

(0) Id. vol. iv. p. 653, & feq.

minions, caused an open war between the two nations. Cromwell, far from being intimidated,

YOU will herewith receive instructions for the better carrying on of your business, which is not of fmall account here, although our discouragements have been many; for which we defire to humble ourselves before the Lord, who hath forely chaffened us. I doe commend, in the midst of others miscarriages, vour constancy and faithfulness to your trust, in every * * where you are, and taking care of a company of poore sheepe left by their shepherds; and be assured, that as that which you have done hath been good in itself, and becoming an honest man, so it hath a e very good favour here with all good christians and all true Englishmen, and will not be forgotten by me, as opportunitie shall serve. I hope you have long before this time received that good supplye which went from hence in July last, whereby you will perceive, that you have not been forgotten heere. I hope also the hips fent for New England are before this tyme with 6 you; and let me tell you, as an encouragement to you and those with you to improve the utmost diligence, and to excite your courage in this business, though not to occasion any negligence in presentinge that affair, onor to give occasion to slacken any improvement of what the place may afford, that you will be followed with what necessary supplies, as well for comfortable fubfishance, as for your fecurity against the Spaniard, this place may afford or you want. And therefore fludy first your securitie by fortifieing; and although wherewith to do ' it in such quantities as were to be wished, yet your case being as that of a marchinge army, wherein every foldier out of principles of nature and according to the practice of all discipline, ought to be at the pains to fecure the common quarter; wee hope no man amongst you will be soe wantinge to himself, consi-6 deringe midated, fent immediate orders to Blake, who was then in the Mediterranean, to act against deringe food is provided for you, as not to be willinge to help to the uttermost therein; and therefore I require you and all with you for the safetie of the whole, that this be made your principal intention. The doinge of this will require, that you be verie careful not to scatter, till you have begun a securitie in some one place. Next I desire you, that you would confider how to form fuch a body of good horse, as may, if the Spaniard should attempt upon you at the next comeing into the Indies with his gallions, be in a readiness to march to hinder his landinge, who will hardby land upon a body of horse; and if he shall land, be in a posture to keep the provisions of the country from him, or him from the provisions, if he shall endeavour to march towards you. Wee trust wee shall furnish you with bridles, saddles, and horse-shoes, and other things necessary for that worke, defiring you to the uttermost to improve what you have already of those forts. Should it be knowne that you had 500 horse well appointed, ready to march upon all occafions in that island, even that alone might deterre the Spaniard from attemptinge any thing upon you. Wee have fent commissioners and instructions into New * England, to trye what people may be drawn thence. Wee have done the like to the English windward islands, and both in England, Scotland, and Ireland, you will - have what men and women we can well transport. Wee thinke, and it is much designed amongst us, to firive with the Spaniard for the mastery of all those feas; and therefore wee could heartily wish, that the filland of Providence were in our hands againe, believinge that it lyes fo advantagiously in reference to the 6 mayne, and especially for the hindrance of the Peru trade and Cariagena, that you would not only have great advantage thereby of intelligence and surprize, but even blocke up the same. It is discoursed here, against Spain. His orders were obeyed, and that if the Spaniard doe attempt you, it is most likely it will be on the cast end of the island towards Cuba, as also Cuba upon Cuba is a place easily attempted, and hath in it a very rich copper mine. It would be good for the first, as you have opportunity, to informe wourfelf, and if there be need, to make a good work thereupon, to prevent them; and for the other, and all things of that kinde, wee must leave them to your ' judgment upon the place, to doe therein as you shall fee cause. To conclude, as we have cause to be humbled for the reproof God gave us at St. Domingo upon the account of our owne fins, as well as others; foe truly upon the reports brought hither to us of the extreame avarice, pride, and confidence, diforders and 6 debauchedness, profaneness and wickedness commonly ' practifed amongst the army; wee cannot onlie bewail the fame, but defire that all with you may doe fo, and that a very special regard may be had soe to go-' verne for tyme to come, as that all manner of vice may be thoroughly discountenanced and severely punished, and that such a frame of government may be exercifed, that virtue and godlinesse may receive due encouragement.'

He lived not indeed to see the beneficial effects of his care. But the English nation has sufficiently experienced it. Jamaica for near a century has returned an immense treasure to her mother country, and enabled her to injure Spain when necessary, in a very sensible manner. This she long has done, and as it is said, is yet capable of doing much more, if properly cultivated, and improved, and rescued out of the hands of monopolizers. How far this is true, it may become those who have the affairs of our colonies under their inspection to enquire; but whatever be the result, it will be an indisputable truth that Jamaica is one great source of wealth to Britain.

wealth (GGG), honor and renown, accrued

the state of the s (GGG) Wealth and honor accrued to his country by Blake's behaviour.] On the King of Spain's feizing the perfons and effects of the English by way of retaliation for what had passed in America, Cremwell published a manifesto in Latin, written, as is supposed, by Milton, setting forth his reasons for his conduct in that affair. This piece contains a great variety of instances of the barbarity, cruelty and oppression exercised by the Spaniards on the English, which are little known. Ships were taken, men murthered, and the islands of Tortuga and Providence wrested out of the hands of the English in times of full peace. Besides these abominable deeds in the new world, an account is given of many hostile acts against the same nation, by the Spaniards, even in Europe; from all which, fays the manifesto, We are confident, we have made it plain to all, who weigh things fairly and impartially, that necessity, honor and justice, have prompted us to undertake this late expedition. First, we have been prompted to it by necessity; it being absolutely necessary to go to war with the Spa-" niards, fince they will not allow us to be at peace with them: and then honor and justice, seeing we cannot pretend to either of these, if we sit still and suffer fuch insufferable injuries to be done our countrymen, (p) Milton's as those we have shown to be done them in the West "Indies (p)." But Cromwell rested not in words. He fent orders to Blake to attack the Spaniards in the Mediterranean or elsewhere, and to seize every thing he could lay his hand on belonging unto them. Blake wanted nothing more. Shortly after, cruiling, in conjunction with general Mentague, off of Cadiz, to intercept the Spanish Firta, captain Stayner, with three fhips of the fleet, fell in with eight galleons, with which he dealt so effectually in two or three hours engagement, that one was funk, another fet on fire, two were forced on shore, and two he took, having on board in money and plate, to the value of fix

· hundred

Works, vol. H. P. 273.

to his country by the behaviour of that gal-

hundred thousand pounds, and only two escaped into Gadiz (q). This action was on the 9th of September, (q) Burchett, 1656. Capt. Stayner, in his letter to the generals of P. 395. the fleet, written on the day of the engagement, fays, The ship he took was as good as all the fleet besides, and the other that capt. Harman took was very rich; (r) Thurlos, though but little filver in her (r).' By the calculation vol. v. p. of the Spaniards, there was taken and lost nine millions 399. of pieces of eight, of which about five millions fell to (5) Id. p. the share of the English (5). Besides this great sum of 400. money, so useful to Cromwell at this time, advantage was made of the intelligence given by the young marquis of Buydex, a prisoner, who was born in Lima, and understood well the state of the West Indies. Montague fpent almost a whole afternoon in discourse with him, and obtained fuch an account from him, as he thought (1) Id. p. worth transmitting to Thurles (t). So intent was he on 434. procuring all possible helps for his country. 'The next year admiral Blake went out with a strong squadron on the same design of intercepting the Spanish West India fleet, and took his station off of Cadiz, where receiving intelligence that those ships were arrived at · Teneriffe, he made the best of his way to that island. 'The Flota lay in the bay of Santa Cruz, drawn up in form of a half-moon, with a strong barricado before them; the bay itself defended by seven forts disposed cound the same, with two cassles at the entrance, which were well furnished with ordnance: in which oposture the Spanish admiral thought himself so secure, that he fent out word by a Dutch merchant, Blake might come if he durst. The admiral having taken a view of the enemy's situation, sent in captain Stayner with a squadron to attack them, who soon forcing his e passage into the bay, was presently supported by Blake with the whole fleet. Placing some of his ships so as that they might fire their broadfides into the castles and forts, himself and Stayner engaged the Spanish lant admiral. Very few commanders ever shewed like conduct and bravery. Nor were fleet, and in few hours obtaining a compleat victory. opossessed himself of all the ships; but being not able to bring them off, he fet them on fire, and they were e every one burnt (u). Sixteen galleons were destroyed, besides others. Most of them had a great part of their loading aboard, which perished all with the ships (x). · The last intelligence from Cadiz (fays Mr. Maynard, the English consul at Lisbon, in a letter to Mr Thurlos, dated June 6, 1657, N.S.) faies, that the losse of those ships in the Canaries goes near their hearts; they thinking it a greater losse to them than the galleons with the plate taken formerly; for the confequence of this losse will be greate, in respect they are wholly disappointed of furnishing the West India with such neceffaries as they wante; for those ships were designed to have gone from thence in few days, if general Blake ' had not prevented them; fo now they are driven to their laste shifte to freight Hollanders, and send them (y) Id. ibid. 6 fome, and fome for the India (y). Such were the naval exploits under the Protector! Exploits, which Mr.

(u) Burchett, p. (x) Thurloe, vol. vi. P. 312.

> -Britain, looking with a just disdain Upon this gilded Majesty of Spain; And knowing well, that empire must decline, Whose chief support, and sinews are of coin; Our nation's folid virtue did oppose, To the rich troublers of the world's repose. And now some months, incamping on the main, Our naval army had besieged Spain: They that the whole world's monarchy defign'd, Are to their ports by our bold fleet confin'd; From whence, our red cross they triumphant see, Riding without a rival on the sea.

Waller has celebrated in more than one of his Poems.

the English less successful on the continent.

A body of men being sent into Flanders, joined

And again,

The sea's our own: and now all nations greet, With bending sails, each vessel of our sleet: Your pow'r extends as far as winds can blow, Or swelling sails upon the globe may go.

He has not used too much poetical licence.

B'ake, after this glorious atchievement, returned to the coast of Spain, and having cruised there some time, was coming home with the fleet to England, when he fell ill of a scorbutic fever, of which he died just as he was entring Plymouth found. Cromwell's parliament, upon the news of his exploit at Santa Cruz, had ordered him a jewel of five hundred pound, and now upon his death bestowed on him a solemn and sumptuous funeral, interring him in Henry VII.'s chap- (2) Burof ple (2). This was on the 4th of September, 1657, chett, p. When his corps was conveyed from Greenwich house 396. by water in a barge of state, adorned with mourning, escutcheons, standards, &c. and attended by divers of his highness's privy council, the commissioners of the admiralty, the officers of the army, and navy, the Lord Mayor and aldermen of the city of London, &c. In their passage along the river on the farther side of the bridge and at the Tower, the great guns were difcharged, as also on this side of the bridge, till they came to Westminster in the New-Palace Yard. Fromthence the corps was by the fame persons of honor ' conducted to Henry VII.'s chapple in the Abbey, where it was interred in a vault made on purpose; and at the interment, the regiments of horse and foot " which attended gave many great volleys of shot. whole was very honourably performed, according to the merit of that noble person, who had done so mae ny eminent fervices for his country both by fea and joined the French under Turenne, who taking (нин) Dunkirk, immediately put it in the pof-

(a) Mercurius Politicus, No. 380, p. 1606. And Wood's Fasti, vol. i. C. 205.

' land (a).' I would not have given this detail of the honors paid to the corps of this most virtuous, valiant and disinterested man, who loved his country, and was beloved and praised by men of all parties who had any sense of merit: I say, I would not have done this, were it not to shew how different his treatment was now, from what it was after the return of Charles II. when his body (in virtue of his Majesty's express command) was taken up and buried in a pit with others in St. Margaret's church-yard, September 12, 1661: 'In which place, fays Wood, it now remaineth, enjoying no other 'monument, but what is reared by his valour, which time itself can hardly deface (b).' This base action

(b) Wood's Fasti, ubi fupra.

(c) Register and Chronicle, p. 536 .. F. l. Lond. 1728. (d) Biogranica, p. 816.

bishop Kennet being, as I suppose, ashamed of, veils over, by faying only shis body was taken up and bu-' ried in the church-yard (c).' What authority a late ingenious writer had to fay that Blake's ' remains were with great decency re-interred in St. Margaret's churchphia Britan-yard,' is hard to fay (d). He refers indeed to Kennet in the place above cited. His authority will by no means, we fee, bear him out, Some of the other bodies taken up, and treated thus ignominiously at the same time, were admiral Dean's, a man of bravery, who loft his life in the service of his country; col. Hump. Mackworth's; Sir William Constable's; col. Boscawen's, a Cornish gentleman, of a family distinguished by its constant attachment to liberty, and flourishing in great reputation, by the well known exploits of the admiral of that name; and many others too long to be here mentioned. Such was the politeness and humanity introduced by the restoration!

(HHH) Dunkirk was immediately put in possession of the Protector.] France and England had been but on indifferent terms. Eourdeaux had arrived in London and entered on a negotiation for peace. He met with various difficulties and delays; and during the treaty, news ar-

possession of the protector.—Such were the

rived that an embargo was laid on the English, in the ports of France. This was by way of reprifal for some hostile acts said to be done by them on the subjects and possessions of that crown. Hereupon the treaty was at a stand, and Cromwell refused absolutely to conclude on any thing till the embargo was taken off. The French were forced to comply, and great was the joy expressed by them for the peace. Cardinal Mazarine, in a letter to Bourdeaux, dated Paris, December 8, 1655, N. S. writes as follows. 'You will understand by monsieur de Brienne all the rejoicings that were made here for the peace. I will only tell you, that amongst other figns of joy, the King hath ordered all the guns to be 6 discharged generally in all the frontier places of this kingdom; a thing which was never done; and likewife his Majesty will have me to have the honor to entertain him to day to dinner in publick, and you e may believe we shall not forget to remember in a (e) Thurloe, folemn manner, the health of the lord protector (e). vol. iv. p. After this, in the year 1657, a league offensive and defensive against Spain, was made between France and England; by which the protector engaged to fend fix thousand foot into Flanders, on condition that the French should undertake the siege of Mardyke, Gravelin, or Dunkirk, and that if either of the two former places were first taken, it should be put into his hands, to be as a hostage till he should be made master of Dunkirk, (f) Lifeof which he was to keep, restoring the other to France (f). 1 urenne, vol. i. p. These troops were sent into Flanders at the joint ex- 207. pence of the contracting powers, but on their landing were taken into French pay, and took place of all the regiments of Turenne's army, fave the two old regiments (g) Thurregiments of, vol. vi. of guards (g). Mardyke the first campaign being taken, p. 287 and was delivered up to the English, who greatly complain- 546. And ed of their being ill used by the French, in respect of Note (DDD). provisions. Gromwell was ill pleased that Dunkirk had not been besieged instead of Mardyke, and therefore Dd pe-

the actions of Cromwell abroad; — actions which drew the eye of by-standers, and pro-peremptorily infifted on its being undertaken early in the year 1658. Mazarine durst not refuse. Turenne had orders to invest it. He obeyed, and was soon joined by the English forces. Lockbart, the English ambassador, had the command in chief of these, under whom was Morgan, an officer of great bravery and experience. The Spaniards, on hearing of the siege, marched to raise it. This produced a battle, in which the victory fell to the allied army, and Dunkirk furrendered on conditions. The next day Lewis XIV. and all his court entered triumphantly into the town, and then delivered it up, according to treaty, to the English, June 15, 1658, Q.S.—Thus had Oliver his defire, of obtaining a footing on the continent, at the expence almost wholly of France. Lockhart in his letter to Thurke, written the day before Dunkirk was delivered into his hands, has the following expressions. 'To-morrow before five of the clock at night, his highness's forces under my command, will be possessed of Dunkirk.——I have a great many disputes with the cardinal, about feveral things. I have agreed he shall have all the cannon in the town, that have the armes of France upon them; but some other things, concerning shipping in the harbor, and the quartering the French guards, and 6 lodging the chief officers of the army, is yett in controversie; neverthelesse I must say, I find him willing to hear reason: and though the generallity of court and arms are even mad to fee themselves part with what they call un fi bon morceau, or so delicatt a bit, yet he is ftill constant to his promises, and seems to be as glad in the generall (notwithstanding our differences in little particulars) to give this place to his highness, as I can be to receive it. The King is also exceeding oblyging and civil, and hath more trew worth in him than I could have imagined (b).'--- From this letter, it demonstrably appears that the following anecdote of

(b) Thurloe, vol. vii. F. 173. To these we must add his deeds of real merit, and worthy of the highest praise, viz.

Dr. Welwood's, though confidently delivered, and frequently, from him, repeated, is an absolute fiction. There was an article, fays he, between France and the protector, that if Dunkirk came to be taken, it fhould immediately be delivered up to the English; and his ambassador Lockbart had orders to take posfession of it accordingly. When the French army being joined with the English auxiliaries, was in its ' march to invest the town, Cromwell sent one morning for the French ambassador to Whitehall, and upbraided him publicly for his mafter's defigned breach of proe mife in giving fecret orders to the French general to keep possession of Dunkirk, in case it was taken, contrary to the treaty between them. The ambassador protested he knew nothing of the matter, as indeed he did not, and begged leave to affure him that there was no fuch thing thought of. Upon which Cromwell pulling a paper out of his pocket, Here (fays he) is a copy of the cardinal's order: and I desire you to dise patch immediately an express to let him know, that I am not to be imposed upon; and that if he deliver onot up the keys of the town of Dunkirk to Lockbart within an hour after it shall be taken; tell him I'll come in person, and demand them at the gates of Paris. There were but four persons said to be privy to the order, the Queen mother, the cardinal; the marefchal de Turenne, and a secretary, whose name it is not fit at this time to mention. The cardinal for a long time blamed the Queen, as if the might possibly have blabbed it out to some of her women: whereas it was found after the fecretary's death, that he had kept a fecret correspondence with Cromwell for several years; and therefore it was not doubted but he had fent him (i)Memoirs, the copy of the order above-mentioned (i). What p. 96. invention! What falshood! Excellent is the use of State Lond. 17361 D d 2 Papers, viz. his interposition in behalf of the Vaudois (III), when under persecution from their

(A) Vol. i. p. 119.

Papers, were it only to detect fuch hafty, credulous, positive writers. Burnet tells us, 'The trade of England suffered more in this, than in any former war (k); and Puffendorf, if I remember right, fays, 1500 ships were taken by the Spaniards. 'Tis not improbable. The commerce of England was at a greater height now than formerly. And the Spaniards by the loss they had fustained, were incapable of making any head, unless by privateering, whereby indeed the merchants of England could not but be sufferers. This always will be the case of a commercial nation, with superiour force, braving her enemies, and blocking up, or destroying their fleets. However, in such a case, the merchants, as sufferers, must have leave to complain.

(111) His interposition in behalf of the Vaudois, &c.]

If protestantism was meerly an hatred of the pope; if it confifted barely in receiving the communion in both moirs of the kinds, or chanting Clement Marot's, or our Sternhold's old Pfalms, it would justly be liable to the ridicule and contempt with which it has been treated, of late, by fome men of genius (1). Or if indeed it tended to detaire's Age of stroy monarchical power (m), to subvert the laws, and throw all things into confusion, princes would do well to be on their guard against it. - But if, on the contrary, protestantism, as fuch, is merely a revival of the doctrine of Jesus Christ, whereby the knowledge and worship of the one true God of the universe was established, and piety and virtue, in their full extent, recommended, and commanded, under the fanctions of rewards and punishments in another world: if this religion is fimple, intelligible, friendly, and benevolent, and void of every thing to amuse or corrupt, then it is worthy of esteem. What is the real state of the case, those only are judges who are well versed in the writings of the New Testament, which the authors above referred

(1) See Me-House of Brandenburg, p. 144 (m) See Vol-Lewis XIV. vol. ii, p. 180.

their fovereign on account of their religion, referred to, I presume, do not pretend to be. One strong presumption, however, in favour of protestantism is, its being the constant object of the hatred of those kings and priests who delight to trample under foot, the liberties of mankind, and render all subject to their own wicked wills. A doctrine of liberty can ill be digested by men sensible of designs subversive of it. Hence have arisen the persecutions of protestants, and in this light have they, I think, generally been viewed. Almost every where, when in power, have the ruling ecclesiastics stirred up princes, to crush and extirpate a race of men who constantly oppose themselves to their defigns. The Vaudois, who long before Luther's time, (perhaps from the first ages of Christianity) had entertained opinions contrary to those of the church of Rome, and were for the most part a plain, honest, well-meaning kind of men, (that had been cruelly used for their opinions only) ' had now a new persecution raised against them by the duke of Savay. So Cromwell sent to Mazarine desiring him to put a stop to that; adding that he knew well they had that duke in their power, and could restrain him as they pleased: and if they did not, he must presently break with them. Maza-' rine objected to this as unreasonable: he promised to do good offices; but he could not be obliged to an-' swer for the effects they might have. This did not fatisfy Cromwell: fo they obliged the duke of Savey to oput a stop to that unjust fury: and Cromwell raised a great fum for the Vaudois, and fent over Morland to fettle all their concerns, and to supply all their lof- (n) Burnet fes (n).'-Mr. (afterwards Sir Samuel) Morland, vol. i. p. has written . The history of the Evangelical Churches of the valleys of Piement:' in which, among other things, is 'a most naked and punctual relation of the late bloody massacre, 1655, and a narrative of all the (e) Folie following transactions to the year of our Lord 1658 (2). London 1658 (2). From

and the generous relief he afforded them in their

From authentic papers in this book, it appears that the protestants under the protection of edicts, confirmed the preceding year by their fovereign, and guilty of no crime, were, by an order, dated January 25, 1655, obliged to quit houses and estates, within three days, upon pain of death, in case they did not make it appear that they were become Catholics within twenty This, though in the depth of winter, old and young complied with. Soon after, a body of troops was fent into the villages and districts of these unhappy creatures, who plundering and spoiling every thing that came in their way, provoked the fufferers who had notice of it so much, that they stood up in their own defence, and put to flight their perfecutors. Orders hereupon were given to afford no quarter. In consequence hereof a terrible scene was exhibited. The utmost cruelties were exercifed upon perfons of every age, fex and condition. Hanging, burning, difmembering, ravishing, and every barbarous and cruel punishment, the most diabolic imagination could invent, was inflicted on them. The Swifs Protestant Cantons, alarmed at these proceedings, interposed with the duke of Savoy, in behalf of these his much wronged subjects. But in vain. They had little attention paid to them, and were out of hopes of procuring any redrefs. The news however reaching Cromwell, . He was so deeply affected with the poor people's calamities, that he was often heard to fay, that it lay as near, or rather nearer his heart, than if it ' had concerned his nearest and dearest relations in the world. Neither indeed were the effects of his chaf rity and christian compassion, at all inferiour to those his zealous, earnest, and pathetick expressions (p). He immediately ordered a collection through the kingdom for a fupply of their necessities, which, through the innate generolity of the English, amounted to the sum of thirty eight thousand, ninety seven pounds, seven shil-

(p) Morland, p. 552. their distresses and sufferings. This (with lings and three-pence . The protector contributed towards this, out of his own pocket, two thousand (q) Morpounds (q).—Our forefathers, we see, were not whol-land, p. 583. ly unacquainted with that spirit, which the present age, with some reason, values itself so much upon. this liberality however Cromwell did not rest satisfied. He immediately writ to the Kings of Sweden and Denmark, to the States-General, and the Protestant Swifs Cantons, requesting them to use their interposition in behalf of their perfecuted brethren, and declaring that if it should prove ineffectual, that he was ready to advise with them about such means as might be most con- (r) Id. p. ducing to their redress and relief (r). And that he might 554. 562. in the most powerful manner effect it, he gave orders to Mr. Morland, May 23, 1655, to prepare himself, ' in order to carry a message from his highness to the duke of Savor, to intreat him to recal that merciless edict, and to restore the remnant of his poor distressed fubjects to their antient liberties and habitations; as 6 likewise in his way to deliver a letter from his highe ness to the king of France, to sollicit his Majesty to employ his power and interest with the duke for the fame purpose.' The orders were soon obeyed. The letter to the French King was delivered, who returned an answer very respectful; containing assurances of his having already mediated in behalf of the protestants in Piedmont, and that he would still continue so to do. To this was added, that he had grounds to hope, that his mediation would not be unprofitable. Morland then proceeded on to Turin, where, after being nobly enter-^{} Cromwell's adversaries, who stuck at nothing to blacken him, had the boldness to affirm, 'That most of the money, which was collected for this purpole, was returned, and applied to the levying of a body of thetter Swifs, to be brought over to controul the army, and reduce the peofrom a true ple to an implicit obedience to his government the This is a ridiculand lawful and lawful the state of the lous tale, and abundantly confuted by Morland's accounts, in which Member of the distribution of the charity appears to have been honeftly and exactly Parliament made.

very many other instances which might be men-

tained, he had audience of the duke of Savor, in the presence of Madame Royale, his mother. Here, in a very eloquent and pathetic speech, he lamented the unheard of cruelties inflicted on the duke's protestant subjects, and faid every thing to move him to compassion. After this the protector's letter was delivered on the same Subject. Madame Royale * hereupon told the English envoy, ' That as on the one fide she could not but extreamly applaud the fingular goodness and charity of his highness the lord protector towards their subjects, whose condition had been represented to him so exceeding fad and lamentable, as the perceived by that discourse of his; so on the other side she could not but extreamly admire, that the malice of men should ever proceed fo far, as to cloath fuch fatherlike and tender chastisements of their most rebellious and insolent sube jects, with so black and ugly a character, to render them thereby odious to all neighbouring princes and flates, with whom they so much defired to keep a good understanding and friendship, especially with so great and powerful a prince as his highness the Lord Protector; and withall, she did not doubt, but that when he should be particularly and clearly informed f of the truth of all passages, he would be so fully satisfied with the duke's proceedings, that he would not give the least countenance to those his disobedient sube jects. But however, for his highness's sake, they would not only freely pardon their rebelilous subjects for those so heinous crimes which they had committed, but also would accord to them such priviledges and graces, as could not but give the Lord Protector (s) Morland, a sufficient evidence how great a respect they bare both to his person and mediation (s). -- In consequence of the Protector's application to the protestant princes and states, a general disposition appeared to fa-

P 575.

The duke was young, and under the tuition of his mother.

mentioned of his concern for the protestant interest.

your the Vaudois. And very probable 'tis, the court of Turin would have been obliged not only to have given them a pardon, but proper security for the enjoyment of their religion and liberties. Unhappily, they were too hasty in procuring themselves a little ease. For while the Dutch ambassador was on his journey in their behalf, and Oliver had fent two persons to join with Morland in negotiating a peace; a treaty was concluded by means of the French ambassador Servient, and the ambassadors of the Swiss Protestant Cantons; a treaty specious in appearance, but productive of many woes. Gromwell, however, ceased not to take care of the interest of those poor people. For understanding that they were still oppressed in many instances, though a stop was put to the massacres and other notorious acts of violence, he fent a letter to Lockhart, his ambassador at the court of France, dated May 26, 1658, in which he desires him, 'To redouble his instances with the French King, in such pathetick and affectionate expressions, as may be in some measure suitable to the f greatness of their present sufferings and grievances, which (the truth is, fays he) are almost inexpressible.' -In this letter is contained a list of their grievances, whereof Lockhart is ordered to make his Majesty thoroughly fensible, and to perswade him to give speedy and effectual orders to his ambassador, who resides in (1) Morland, the duke's court, to act vigorously in their behalf (t). $\stackrel{\text{p. }697, \&}{\text{feq.}}$ This detail, plainly shews the little exactness there is in the above-cited passage from Burnet,-"Tis not impossible however, if Cromwell had lived a little longer, he would have fully carried his point with regard to these men; his connections and influence in France being about this time at their height. - I will add one relation more on this subject from Clarendon, a relation honourable indeed to Cromwell, though I am afraid not much to be depended on; as no traces, except of the tumult, are to be found in Lockbart's letters. -- 'In 4 the interest, and the protection he always grant-

the city of Nilmes, which is one of the fairest in the brovince of Languedoc, and where those of the ref ligion do most abound, there was a great faction at that season when the consuls (who are the chief magistrates) were to be chosen. Those of the reformed religion had the confidence to fet up one of themfelves for that magistracy; which they of the Roman religion resolved to oppose with all their power. The diffention between them made fo much noise, that the s intendant of the province, who is the supream minis fter in all civil affairs throughout the whole province, went thither to prevent any diforder that might hap-4 pen. When the day of election came, those of the 4 religion possessed themselves with many armed men of 4 the Town-house, where the election was to be made: 4 The magistrates sent to know what their meaning was; to which they answered, They were there to give their voices for the choice of the new confuls, and to be fure that the election was fairly made. The bishop of the city, the intendant of the province, with all the officers of the church, and the prefent e magistrates of the town, went together in their robes to be present at the election, without any suspicion that there would be any force used. When they came e near the gate of the Town-house, which was shut, and they supposed would be opened when they came, they within poured out a volley of musket-shot upon them, by which the dean of the church, and two or three of the magistrates of the town, were killed upon the place, and very many others wounded; whereof fome died shortly after. In this confusion, the magistrates put themselves into as good a posture to defend themselves as they could, without any purpose of offending the others, till they should be better prowided; in order to which they fent an express to the court with a plain relation of the whole matter of f fact; and that there appeared to be no manner of comed it) yielded just matter of praise to his combination with those of the religion in other places of the province, but that it was an insolence in those of the place, upon the presumption of their great numbers, which were little inferiour to those of the catholics.' The court was glad of the occasion, and refolved that this provocation, in which other places were not involved, and which nobody could excuse, · should warrant all kinds of feverity in that city, even to the pulling down their temples, and expelling ma-4 ny of them for ever out of the city; which, with the: execution and forfeiture of many of the principal perfons, would be a general mortification to all of the religion in France, with whom they were heartily offended; and a part of the army was forthwith ordered to march towards Nilmes, to see this executed with the utmost rigour. Those of the religion in the town, were quickly fensible into what condition they had brought themselves; and sent with all possible submission, to the magistrates to excuse themselves, and to impute what had been done to the rashness of parsticular men, who had no order for what they did.

were fensible of their miscarriage; but that they could say nothing upon the subject, till the King's pleasure should be known; to whom they had sent a full relation of all that had passed. The others very well knew what the King's pleasure would be, and forthwith sent an express, one Moulins, who had lived many years in that place, and in Montpelier, to Cromwell, to desire his protection and interposition. The express made so much haste, and found so good a reception the first hour he came, that Cromwell, after he had received the whole account, bad him restresh himself after so long a journey, and he would take such care of his business, that by the time he came to Paris he should find it dispatched; and that night, sent away another messenger to his embassador

'The magistrates answered, that they were glad they

p. 651.

admirers (KKK), and has accordingly been cele-

Lockhart; who, by the time Moulins came thither, had fo far prevailed with the cardinal, that orders were fent to flop the troops, which were upon their march to Nilmes; and, within few days after, Moulins returned with a full pardon, and amnesty from the King, under the great feal of France, fo fully confirmed with all circumstances, that there was never farther mention made of it, but all things passed as if there had never been any fuch thing. So that no body can wonder, that his memory remains still in those (u) Vol. vi. parts, and with those people, in great veneration (u). -I will not youch, as I hinted above, for the truth 'Tis certain the behaviour of the proof this relation. testants is misrepresented, as will appear from the following passage of Lockbart's to Thurlos, dated Paris, Tanuary 12, 1658, N. S. Wee were vesterday alarmed with ill news from Nilmes, one of the most confiderable cities of the protestants. It was reported, that they and the Roman Catholicks had been by the ears, and that much blood had been shed. Their courier arrived this morning, and informs, there hath been some dispute upon the account, that the goveronor, by the infligation of their bishops, would have deprived the citizens of their priviledge of choosing their magistrates: the Catholicks, as well as the Pro-' testants opposed the governor, who had armed the garrison against this town. There is not above half a fcore killed of the garrison, and 'the chief of the protestants faved the bishops and governor's life (x). How different this from Clarendon! 'Tis strange he never could adhere to truth in his narratives!

(x) Therloe, vol. vi. P. 727.

> (KKK) This yielded just matter of praise to his admirers, &c.] Let us hear Mr. Morland, a gentleman, a scholar, and a close observer of the actions of the protector. In his dedication of the book, fo much made use of in the preceding note, addressing himself to Oliver, he speaks as follows. It is an observation of ' that celebrated by them.—Let us now take a view that excellent prince, the duke of Roban, that the interest of the chief magistrate of England is, by all · means to become head of the reformed party throughout Europe; and it is your highness's glory and crown, that you have formed all your counsels in order thereunto, and laying afide all other reasons of fate, have adhered only to this, that your own interest may appear one and the same with the universal interest of the evangelical churches in their respective nations. The piety of which resolution the Lord himfelf hath born witness to, by a continued feries of wonderful providences and heavenly benedictions that have always accompanied you in your most honour-4 able and heroic enterprizes; whereas those other princes that went before you, who had little regard in the administration of their government, either to the 6 honest maxims of human policy, or to the wholesome rules of the holy Scriptures (which they ought to have bound about their necks, and to have graven on ' the tables of their hearts) but miserably spent the best of their powerful interests, and precious talents, in perfecuting tender consciences in their own do-6 minions, and most treacherously betraying the protestant cause in Germany, France, and other countries, did at last, to their great assonishment, even in the height of those their oppressions, and in the midst of all their jollities, behold with their eyes a Mene " Tekel upon the walls of their palaces and banqueting houses, and of late years in all the branches of their families have tasted the bitter fruits of their own unrighteous doings. This is a doom which was long fince pronounced against them by the most pious pastors and professors of foreign churches, who oft-times heretofore have been heard to fay, That God would one day render a recompence to that House for all their perfidious dealings towards his poor fervants, and now many of those godly men, who have lived to view of Cromwell's government at home; in · fee the execution of those his righteous judgments, confidering on the other fide the wonderful passages of divine providence leading the way to the extirpation of that family, and to the placing of your highness in the princely dignity, have of late frequently declared (as I myself have been divers times an ear witness) with tears of joy in their eyes, that they looked on you as a man miraculously raised up by God, and endowed with an extraordinary spirit of wisdom and courage, to plead the cause of his afflicted ones against the mighty, that they may no more oppress. Who is there fo ignorant in these our days who knows not, that all the peace, tranquillity, and priviledges, which those of the reformed religion enjoy at present in any ' part of the European world, does fome way or other 6 own your patronage and protection? And who is there likewise that knows not that when first you were called forth in the view of the world, and fine gled out as a chosen instrument to go forth to help • the Lord against the mighty, and to fight his battles against the great persecutors, the estate and condition of the church militant was but at a very low ebb? The mighty floods of popery and atheism-were broken in upon the ifies of Great Britain and Ireland, and the poor protestants in all other parts were even finking down under the heavy burthens laid upon their · shoulders by those cruel task-masters of the church of · Rome; yea, the plowers were almost every where e plowing and making long furrows upon the backs of the faithful ones in all the quarters and corners of their habitations! It was a time when the enemies of the Lord took crafty counsel together against his people; and were confederate against his hidden ones (the tabernacles of Edom and the Ishmaelites! Amaleck and the Philistines, with them that dwell at Tyre!) they faid one to another, Come and let us cut them off • from being a people, that so their name may be had in which there were many things truly laudable.

ono more in remembrance. And the truth is, they had undoubtedly compaffed their hellish designs, had onot the shepherd of Israel awoke as a man out of fleep, and found out a man (I mean your highness) (y) Dedicato stand in the gap, girding you with strength unto tion to his History of the battle, and putting his own sword into your hand, the Church-to fmite those his enemies in the hinder parts, and es of Piemont, p. 2.

• put them to a perpetual reproach (y).

This application of antient names of Gentile (2) and (2) See Bur-Idolatrous nations, to the Romillo church, and the opi- ra Judgeonion fo publicly avowed of Cromwell's being raifed up rum Restauratione, p. by providence to defend God's true church, and con-19. 8vo: found its enemies: these things, I say, render probable Lond. 1727. the conjecture of a very learned and judicious friend, And Dr. that Milton intended fome lines in his Samson Agoni- the Prophestes, should be applied to Cromwell and his followers, cies, vol. iii. and the national defertion of his cause, his family, and P. 378. 8vo. Lond. 1760. his friends. Such are the following, though mixt with a circumstance or two peculiar to the History of Samson.

CHORUS.

In feeking just occasion to provoke The Philistine, thy country's enemy, Thou never wast remiss, I bear thee witness: Yet Israel still serves with all his sons.

SAMSON.

That fault I take not on me, but transfer On Ifrael's governors, and heads of tribes, Who feeing those great acts, which God had done Singly by me against their conquerors, Acknowledg'd not, or not at all confider'd Deliverance offer'd: I on th' other fide Us'd no ambition to commend my deeds, The deeds themselves, though mute, spoke loud the (a) Samson Agonistes. doer, &c. (a). v. 237.

Had

able. His court was more free from vice;

Had Judab that day join'd, or one whole tribe; They had by this posses'd the tow'rs of Gath, And lorded over them whom now they serve: But what more oft in nations grown corrupt; And by their vices brought to servitude, Than to love bondage more than liberty, Bondage with ease; than strenuous liberty; And to despise; or envy, or suspect Whom God hath of his special favor rais'd As their deliverer; if he ought begin, How frequent to desert him; and at last To heap ingratitude on worthiest deeds (b)?

(b) Samfon Agonistes, v. 265.

But I a private person, whom my country
As a league-breaker gave up bound, presum'd
Single rebellion and did hostile acts.
I was no private but a person rais'd
With strength sufficient and command from heaven
To free my country; if their servile minds
Me their deliverer sent would not receive,
But to their masters gave me up for nought,
Th' unworthier they; whence to this day they serve, &c. (c)

(c) Id. v. 1208.

To return.—We find another of his panegyrists speaking of him in yet lostier terms, in the following passages. 'He is not only a refuge for good men, and the very fanctuary of religion, not its fortresse only and sure cassle of desence; but he hath his troops slying to disarm tyrants and oppressors; his forces are ready to march out against the storms and tempests of any menacing enemy. You may see him like a champion with a great spirit and gauntlet, stalking forward like a giant with lightning in his eyes, and an all-conquering look, stretching forth a brawney arme as if he meant to cut off a hundred thousand heads at a blow: you may see him dealing with wild beasts and

than the generality of courts are supposed to be, nor did he care to countenance (LLL) and

ferpents, and how he clears the coast amidst a compaony of devils; how he makes a lane through them, and opens a passage for God's people through all hae zards and difficulties, amidst all the gloomy powers and principalities of darknesse. You may see angels heading his weapons, and his lances fent him from (d) The un-heaven: his graces are all zealous to be ferviceable paralleled in the advancement and guardianship of the true tro- Monarch, testant interest (d). In such strains were these gene-P 14 12mo. rous actions spoken of in his own times! -- The following wish of a very modern writer will be deemed perhaps equally as honourable to the memory of Cromwell. It is put into the mouth of Burnet just after the revolution. 6 Oh! fays he, that I might fee the day, when our deliverer [William III.] shall become, what a bold usurper nobly figured to himself in the middle of this century, the foul and conductor of the protestant cause through all Europe! and, that as Rome hath hitherto been the centre of flavish impositions (e) Moral and antichriftian politicks, the court of England may and Political Dialogues, henceforth be the constant refuge and asylum of faint- p. 255, 8vo.

ing liberty and religion (e).

(LLL) His court was mire free from vice, &c] However it happens, men are generally prejudiced against the morals and integrity of courts. Perhaps, it is through ignorance, or, perhaps, through prejudice, or fome other cause equally as unreasonable. But be this as it may, 'tis certain divines and poets, historians and moralists, caution their readers against the danger of fuch places, and exhort them to fly swiftly from their infection. And fome there have been, long versed in them, who have declared them incompatible with vir- Whiston's tue (f). Quotations to support these affertions would Life, p. 3 4. be needless Allowances, however, ought to be made 8vo. Lond, for the language of declamation, refertment, difappoint, 1749. for the language of declamation, refentment, disappointment, and the heightnings of poetical compositions.

and encourage any of profligate manners. He

Though, after all, it were well if there was not ground, fully fufficient, to complain.—In this respect, how-ever, as well as many others, the court of the protector was distinguished. All here had an air of sobriety and decency; nothing of riot or debauch was feen or heard of. Cromwell's own manners were grave, and fuch were the manners of those around him, though feafoned, on occasion, with pomp, state and pleasantry. 'What palace,' fays a contemporary writer, 'was ever e less adulterated than his? Nay, in that very place, where pimps and panders were used to traffique, and fport in the base revellings of lust, there is now fitting a religious covent of our best and most orthodox divines; and whereas formerly it was very difficult to · live at court without a prejudice to religion, it is now impossible to be a courtier without it. Whosoever looks now to get preferment at court, religion must be brought with him instead of money for a place: here are none of those usual throngs of vicious and debaucht fwash bucklers, none of those servile and taylfhaking spaniels, none of those moe hair, linsie-woolfy, nits and lice gentlemen, no fuch changeable caralleled Mo. 'melions (g).'—Let us add hereunto the testimony narch, p. 70. of an adversary. 'His own court, says he, was regu-· lated according to a fevere discipline; here no drunkard, nor whore-master, nor any guilty of bribery, (b) Bates. was to be found, without fevere punishment (b). But that we may not rest wholly on words, we will produce some facts which will fully evince the truth of the text. The two following passages are related by Whitlock .- Being now in London, and hearing of the Queen of Sweden's intention to come into Eng-I and, I made it known to the protector; but he 5-would not give her any encouragement; he put it all upon the ill example she would give here by her course of life, and would not be satisfied by me to the contrary. Graef Hannibal Sefthead, a lord of

Den-

(g) Unpa-

p. 191.

He filled the benches with able and honest judges.

Denmark, who had married the king's half fifter there. and been vice-roy of Norway, but afterwards grew out of favour with his king, came into England to fee the protector, and made his applications to me, whom he had been acquainted with in Germany. I brought him to the protector, and he used him with all courtefy; he dined with him feveral times, and the protector was much taken with his company; he being a very ingenious man, spake many languages, and English perfectly well, and had been employed in feveral great charges and ambaffies, but he was a very debauched person; which, when the protector knew, he would not admit him any more into his converfahe would not admit nim any more into the convertation; and, not long after, he departed out of Eng-ale, p. 599. · land (i).

Bishop Burnet informs us, that the earl of Orrery told him, 'That coming one day to Cromwell, during the debates about his accepting the title of king, and telling him he had been in the city all that day, Gromwell asked him what news he had heard there: the other answered, that he was told he was in treaty with the King, who was to be restored, and to marry his daughter. Cromwell expressing no indignation at this, lord Orrery faid, in the state to which things were brought, he faw not a better expedient: they might bring him in on what terms they pleased: and · Cromwell might retain the same authority he then had with less trouble. Cromwell answered, the King can e never forgive his father's blood. Orrery faid, he was one of many concerned in that, but he would be alone in the merit of restoring him. Cramwell replied, he was fo damnably debauched he would undo is all: and fo turned to another discourse without any emo- (k) Burnet, tion (k). Lady Mary Cromwell, in a letter writ-vol. i. p. ten to her brother Henry Cromwell, June 23, 1656, 107. fays, that the reason of her father's not embracing of the terms offered by the earl of Warwick, in confidejudges, and caused (MMM) justice, for the most part, to be equally and impartially administred.

(/) Thurloe, vol. v. p. 146.

ration of the marriage proposed between his grandson Mr. Rich, and their sister Frances, for some time, 'was not so much estat, as some private reasons, which was a diflik to the young person, which he had from fom reports of his being a visious man, given to play and fuch lik things, which offis was done by fom that had a mind to brak of the match (1).' The reports, however, on examination, proving false, the match was concluded with the consent of the protector. These passages sufficiently evince the care of Oliver to avoid giving even countenance to vice; and also the regularity of manners in those who partook of his favour and encouragement. We may well suppose the nation must be improved in their morals by such examples. (MMM) He filled the benches with able and honest judges, &c.] The historians of all parties have, by the

(m) Clarenp. 650.

(n) Detecp. 72.

(0) Cata logue of the Dukes, Marquiffes, &c. with a'l . the honours that his Highness. hath beflowed fince government to this pre-Ly, 8vo.

notoriety of the fact, been forced to pay this tribute of don, vol. vi. praise to Gromw ll. I could mention many; but will content myself with the authorities of Clarendon and Coke, who, though of different principles, were equally tion, vol. ii. foes to the government and memory of the protector. The former affirms, 'That in matters, which did not concern the life of his jurisdiction, he seemed to have great reverence for the law, rarely interpoling between party and party (m).' The latter affures us 'That · Westminster-hail was never replenished with more learned and upright judges than by him; nor was juftice either in law or equity, in civil cases, more equal-'ly distributed, where he was not a party (n).' The names of his judges, possibly, may not be unacceptahe began his ble to some readers. They were as follows: the lordchief-justices Gl,n and St. John; the justices Warburton, Newdigate, Atkins, Hale, Windham; the barons Nicho-T.W. i. e. las, Parker, Hill (o). The commissioners of the great Tho. Waik- Seal, at first, were the famous Mr. Whitlack, Widringministred.—He fought out every where ton and Lenthal; afterwards Fiennes, Lifle and Lenthal. The gentlemen of the long robe still mention the names of some of these persons with great honour. How sollicitous Cromwell was to appoint the most able and upright persons to fill the important posts of the law, will best appear by the following quotations. -- 'Cromwell feeing him (Mr. Hale) poffest of so much prac-tice, and he being one of the eminentest men of the ' law, who was not at all afraid of doing his duty in those critical times, resolved to take him off from it, and raise him to the bench. Mr. Hale saw well enough the fnare laid for him, and though he did not much confider the prejudice it would be to himfelf, to exchange the easy and faser profits he had by his practice for a judge's place in the common pleas, which he was required to accept of, yet he did deliberate more on the lawfulness of taking a commission from usurpers; but having considered well of this, he came to be of opinion, that it being absolutely e necessary to have justice and property kept up at all times, it was no fin to take a commission from usurpers, if he made no declaration of his acknowledging their authority, which he never did. He was much ' urged to accept of it by some eminent men of his own ' profession, who were of the King's party, as Sir Or-· lando Bridgman, and Sir Geoffery Palmer; and was e also satisfied concerning the lawfulness of it, by the resolution of some famous divines, in particular Dr. Sheldon, and Dr. Henchman, who were afterwards promoted to the fees of Canterbury and London. To thefe were added the importunities of all his friends, who thought, that in a time of fo much danger and oppression, it might be 'no small security to the nation, to have a man of his integrity and abilities on the bench: and the usurpers themselves held him in that eftimation, that they were glad to have him give a countenance to their courts, and, by promoting one E e 3 for men of abilities (NNN), in order proper-

Life of Sir Matthew Hale, p. 35. Svo Lond. 1682.

that was known to have different principles from (p) Burnet's them; affected the reputation of honouring and trusting men of eminent virtues, of what periwasion soe-' ver they might be, in relation to publick matters (p).' -Another work speaks more plainly on this subject. --- 'He [Cromwell] studied to feek out able and ho-' nest men, and to employ them. And so having heard that my father had a very great reputation in Scot-' land, for piety and integrity, tho' he knew him to be a Royalist, he sent to him, desiring him to accept of a judge's place, and to do justice in his own country, hoping only that he would not act against his go' vernment, but he would not press him to subscribe Times, vol. or swear to it (q). How great! how generous! it was hardly possible, but a man of such a disposition must be well ferved.

and gave them proper employment.] That princes have fuch poor tools oftentimes about them is owing to their own weakness, or negligence. They have not either fense enough to discern, or fortitude to resuse or repel fuch as, without merit, aspire to their favour. So that their ministers are sometimes of different and contradictory characters, and hinder more than forward the bufiness in which they pretend to engage. Mobs are in most courts; wife men are distinguished alone in those whose princes themselves excel. From the choice of ministers and favourites the character of the sovereign may be oftentimes taken .- Cromwell was all eyes. He saw every thing, he judged of every thing; few perfons escaped his notice; merit was the object of his choice. The authorities I shall now produce, will, I am perfuaded, justify may affertions. The following anecdote is prior, indeed, in point of time, to the protectorate, but 'tis properly a part of Cromuell's history, and tends to illustrate most this part of his character. It is given by Mr. Morrice, a gentleman of cha-

(9) History of his own 1. p. 125.

ly to employ them: endeavouring hereby to racter, who had it from lord Brighill. -- After the horrid murder was committed upon the King's facred e person, lord Broghill, giving up all Ireland for lost, retired into England, to a small estate left him by his father at Marston in Somerseisbire, where he lived till 6 1649. During this retirement, his lordship lamenting the fad condition of the royal family, and the ruin of these kingdoms, and reflecting upon the cruelties and inhumanities of the Irish rebels, he, at last, thought it too much below his spirit and duty to sit fill, and fee all rights thus trampled under foot by usurpers. He resolved, therefore, to attempt something for the publick as well as private good; and, ' accordingly, under pretence of going to the Spa waters in Germany, he intended to cross the seas, and apply himself to King Charles II. for a commission to raife what forces he could to restore his Majesty in Ireland, and to recover his own estate, then given for 6 loft. But, in order to the accomplishing this resolution, he fent to the earl of Warwick, who had an interest in the prevailing party, desiring him to procure a licence for him to pass beyond the seas to Spa; onot acquainting that lord with the main intent of his e going, and only communicating his defign to fome friends, whom he imagined to be loyal and fecret. He had already made up a confiderable fum of money. and was now arrived at London, in order to profecute his voyage; when a gentleman belonging to Cromwell, who was then made general in Sir Thomas Fair-' fax's place, came to his lodgings, to let him know that the general, his mafter, intended to wait upon him, if he knew but the hour when he would be at 6 leizure to receive him. My lord was very much furprized at this paffage, because he had never any acquaintance with Cromwell, nor ever exchanged one Wherefore he told the gentleman, word with him. he prefumed he was mistaken, and that he was not Ee 4

THE LIFE OF

424

provide for his own honour and the na-

the person to whom the general had sent him with that message. The gentleman made answer, he was fent to lord Broghill; and, therefore, if he was that lord, he was fent to him. My lord finding that there was no mistake in the gentleman, owned that he ' was the lord Broghill; but defired the gentleman to forefent his humble fervice to the general, and to let him know that he would not give him the trouble to come to him, but that he would wait on the gee neral, if he knew where he was, and when he might; and to that end would immediately make himself ready for it. The gentleman told my lord he would acquaint his excellency with it, and fo took his leave. 6 His lordship, in the mean time, was mightily concerned what Cromwell's business with him should be. While he was thus musing, Cromwell came to him; and, after mutual falutations, told him, he had a great kindness and respect for his lordship, and there-· fore he was come to acquaint him with fomething that did very nearly concern him, and to give him his advice in the matter. He then proceeded to let him 6 know, that the council of state was acquainted with his defigns, that he was come to town in order to his passing beyond sea; but, instead of going to the · Spa for his gout, was going to the King for a comf mission to raise men, and oppose their government in ' Ireland; and that under this pretence the earl of · Warwick had got him a licence from the state to pass the feas. As Cromwell was going on, my lord interrupted him, and told him, he prefumed his excel-· lency was mistaken in the matter, for he was not ca-* pable of doing any thing that way; and therefore defired him to believe no fuch thing. But Cromwell told him, he had good proof for what he faid, and could shew copies of his letters to that purpose, and therefore defired him not to deceive himself; for the council had ordered him to be clapt in the Tower

tion's welfare.—Learning he favoured, and upon his arrival in town; which had been executed accordingly, had not he himself interposed in his behalf, and procured fome time to confer with him. to see whether he might not be drawn off from his purpose. Upon this, and other circumstances, my 6 lord, finding that he was discovered, begged Cromwell's pardon, and thanked him for his kindness, and 6 defired him to advise him what to do. Gramwell told ' him, that neither he, nor the council, were strangers to his actions in the Irish war; and therefore the subduing of the Irish rebels being left to his care, he had obtained leave from the council to make an offer to 6 lord Broghill, that if he would ferve in the wars against the Irish, he should have a general officer's command, and should have no oaths or engagements ' laid upon him, nor should be obliged to fight against any but the Irish. My lord did not a little wonder at this large offer, and would have excused himself, desiring some time to consider of it: but Cromwell told him, he must resolve presently, for there was no time to deliberate, because the council, from whom he came, were resolved to send his lordship to the Tower as foon as ever Cromwell should return to them. in case this offer was not readily accepted. Lord 6 Broghill feeing no fubterfuges could any longer be 6 made use of, and finding his liberty and life were in danger, whereby he might be rendered utterly incapable of ferving his Majesty; and not knowing but, by accepting this offer, he might afterwards be ferviceable to the royal party, he resolved to accept of it upon the conditions which Cromwell mentioned: f promifing upon his word and honour, he would faithfully affilt Cromwell in subduing the Irish rebellion. Whereupon Cromwell affured him, he should have those conditions performed to a tittle; and defired him to hasten down to Bristol, where men should be fent to him, and ships wait for his transportation, and he and was munificent to fuch as excelled in

(r) Morrice's Life of Lord Orrery, prefixed to his State papers. Fol. Lond. 1742. And Budgel's Mermoirs of the Boyles, p. 43. 8 vo. Lond. 1739.

himself would follow him with another army; all which was accordingly done (r).'-Brogbill was worthy of Cramwell's choice: he ferved him faithfully. was fincerely attached to the interests of his family, and did every thing to support it. The next instance I shall give from Wood, who chose not, we may well suppose, to fallify in favour of the protector. -- 'In 1649, fays he, one Mr. Greaves of Gray's-Inn, an intimate acquaintance with Dr. Meric Cafaubon, brought him a message from Oliver Cromwell, then lieutenant-general of the parliament's forces, to bring him to Whitehall to confer with him about matters of moment, but his wife being then lately dead, and not, s as he faid, buried, he defired to be excused. Afterwards Greaves came again, and our author [Cafauben] being in some disorder for it, fearing that evil might follow, he defired him to tell him the meaning of the matter, but Greaves refuling, went away the second time. At length he returned again, and told him, that the lieutenant general intended his good and advancement, and that his particular errand was, that he would make use of his pen to write the history of the late war, defiring, withall, that nothing but mat-' ters of fact be impartially fet down, &c. To which he returned answer, that he defired his humble fer-' vice and hearty thanks be returned for that great hoonour done unto him, and withall, that he was uncapable, in feverall respects, for such an employment, and could not fo impartially engage in it, but that his subject would force him to make such reflections as would be ungrateful, if not injurious to his lordhip. Notwithlianding this answer, Gromwell seemed 6 fo fensible of his worth, that tho' he could not win ' him over to his desires, yet he acknowledged a great respect for him, and, as a testimony thereof, he ordered that, upon the first demand, there should be delivered three or four hundred pounds by a certain bookfeller.

feller in London (whose name was Cromwell) whenfoever his occasions should require, without acknowledging any benefactor at the receipt of it. But this offer, as I have been informed by our author's fon John Cafauben, he scorned to accept, though his condition was then mean. At the same time it was proposed by the faid Greaves (who belonged to the library at St. James's) that if our author would gratify him in the foregoing request, Cromwell would restore unto him all his father's [Isaac Casaubon's] books, which were then in the royal library there (given by King " James, who had invited him into England) and, withall, a patent for three hundred per annum, to be paid (s) Wood's to the family fo long as the youngest son of Dr. Isaac Athena, · Cafaubon should live. But this also was refused (s). vol. ii. co It appears from a letter of Dr. Cudworth's, that he was consulted by Mr. Thurlee (no doubt but by the protector's orders) with regard to the characters of fuch persons in the university, as were proper to be employed in political and civil affairs. The doctor mentions feveral men of distinguished learning and abilities, and then adds, 'many more names I could fet down; but these may suffice for your choice; and you may, if you think good, enquire further concerning any of them from some others, and, if you please, from this sentleman, whom I have, for that purpose, defired to present this to you, Mr. George Rust, fellow of Christ-· Colledge, who can further inform and fatisfy you concerning them. He is an understanding, pious, discreet man, and himself I know to be a man of exceeding good parts, and a general scholar, but one that · feems not fo willing to divert himself from preaching and divinity, which he hath of late intended; otherwife I know his parts are fuch, as would enable him for any employment. If you please to enquire surther from him, and by him fignify your further pleafure to me, I shall be ready in this, or any thing else. f that I am able to expresse myself,

Sir, your affectionately devoted friend and fervant,

R. CUDWORTH.

science (000). Nor did he fail of making use.

(t) Cudworth's Life by Dr. Birch, prefixed to the first vol. of the Intellectual 4to Lond. 3743· (u) Brch's Life of Boyle, p. $17, 8vo. Lond. 1744. (x) Wood's Athenæ. vol. ii. c. 2c8.

(v) Id. c. 646.

Mr. Zachary Cradock was recommended to the secretary by this gentleman, for the place of chaplain to the English merchants at Liston. He was afterwards provost of Eaton, and greatly celebrated for his genius and learning (t). Dr. John Pell, eminent for his skill in the mathematics, in the Latin, Greek, Hebrew, Arabic, System, p. 8. Italian, French, Spanish, and High and Low Dutch languages, was appointed envoy from the protector to the protestant cantons in Swifferland (u). Mr. (afterwards Sir) William Petty was ordered by Oliver, to take a furvey, and make maps of the kingdom of Ireland, for which he had a falary of 3651. per ann. besides many other advantages which enabled him to raise a great estate (x). And it is said, however improbably, 'That Cromwell was so pleased with many of Mr. Hobbes's principles laid down in the Leviathan, which tended to iustify and support his usurpation, that the great place of being secretary was proffered to him (y).

If to these instances, we add Milton, Mr. Marvel, and Mr. Marland before mentioned, together with Nat. Bacon, author of the celebrated discourses on government, who was one of Cromwell's masters of requests, Francis Osborn, a writer of good repute, who had public employments under him, and Mr. Samuel Hartlib, to whom he allowed one hundred pounds a year for his industry and expences in feveral publick fervices; we shall be convinced that he was not destitute of men of abilities, or negligent of employing them in a manner honourable to themselves, as well as advantagious to the nation.

(000) He favoured learning, and was munificent to fuch as excelled in science.] We have seen in the two preceding notes, the care of the protector to select men capable of transacting public business in an honourable and useful manner to the community of which he had taken on himself to be the head. Most of these were well versed in the sciences, and consequently would,

well

use of the methods of kindness and condefcen-

well enough, have ferved for proofs of Cromwell's fayour to the learned. I shall add however others, that his regard to learning may be put out of a possibility of doubt.—Oliver was chancellour of the university of Oxford, and within a year after his assuming the protectorate, at his own charge, he bestowed on the public bibrary there, twenty five antient manuscripts; ten of which were in folio, and fourteen in quarto, all in Greek, except two or three. He moreover ordered to a private divinity reader there (newly chosen to that place) an annuity of one hundred pounds per annum, (z) Mercu-out of the exchequer, for the faid reader's encourage-rius Politiment (z). When the great design was on foot of cus, No. publishing the Polyglott, by Dr. Walten, the protector 223. P. permitted the paper to be imported duty free *. And Whitlock, 'tis a fact, attested by his very enemies, that he hin-p. 605. dered the fale of archbishop Usher's valuable library of prints and manuscripts, to foreigners, and caused it to be purchased, and sent over to Dublin, with an intention to bestow it on a new college or hall, which he (a) See had proposed to build and endow there (a). Dr. Parr of Usher, and Dr. Smith fay, the purchase was made by the of- p. 102. ficers and foldiers of the army in Ireland, but how this is confistent with Parr's faying afterwards, that ' when this library was brought over into Ireland, the usurper and his fon, who then commanded in chief there, would not bestow it on the college of Dublin,' is very hard to fay. I presume they would not have claimed the right of bestowing, if they had not acquired that right by purchasing. Dr. Smith, sensible of this, has varied from his original, (for he is little more than a translator of Parr) and attributes both purchase, re-

Towards the close of Walton's presace we find the following words: Primo autem commemorandi quorum savore Chartam a Vectigalibus immunem habuimus, quod quinque ab hinc annis, a Concilio secretiori primo concessim, postea a Serenssimo D. Pratestore ejusque Concilio, operis promovendi causa, benigne consirmatum et continuatum crat.

fcention, in feveral respects, to conciliate the fufal of bestowing on the college of Dublin, and inten-

(b) Vita Jacobi Uffe-Thoma Smitho S. Theologia, Doctore & Ecclefiæ Anglicanæ Prefbytero, prefixed to Usher's An- 6 nals, Geneva, 1722. Folio, p. 55.

tion of ereding a new building for its reception, to the rii Scriptore, officers and foldiers only (b) - Smith however allows with Parr, that Cremwell had the merit of hindering the exportation of this valuable library into foreign parts; and with aftonishment crys out, Quis autem crederet hominem, enthusiasmi suroribus subinde correptum. & humanioris literaturæ osorem, cavisse, ne thesaurus ifte extra Angliam, non fine fumma injuria genti inurenda, exportaretur?' His astonishment would have ceased, had he known the true character of the protector. But to go on. A representation having been made to the parliament of the commonwealth of England, by the gentlemen of the county of Durham, and fent up by the high sheriff to the parliament, inter alia, that the college and houses of the dean and chapter, being then empty and in decay, might be employed for erecting a college, school, or academy for the benefit of the northern counties, which are so far from the universities; and that part of the lands of the dean and chapter near the city, might be set out for pious uses: it was referred to a committee to state the business and report their opinion. This was in May, 1650. From this time till about seven years after, we hear no more of it. But on the 15th of May, 1657, the Lord Protector, by writ of privy feal, erected a college at Durham, confisting of one provost or master, two preachers or fenior fellows, and twelve other fellows. 6 And for the endowment of the faid college, the cathedral · church and church-yard of Durham, and the several · meffuages with their appurtenances thereunto belonging were granted. To these were added a yearly rent-charge of one hundred and seventeen pounds, fifteen shillings and eight pence, and another of five hundred pounds issuing out of the manors of Gateshead and Wickham in the said county of Durham, as also one other of two hundred eighty-four pounds, four 6 fhilthe (PPP) affections of his enemies to his person fhillings and four-pence, iffuing out of lands lately belonging to the bishop or dean and chapter of that diocese. Besides all these donations, the books printed and manuscript belonging to the late bishop dean and chapter were added, and a liberty of purchasing or receiving lands, not exceeding the yearly value (c) Peck's of fix thousand pounds (c). We may see by this, that Oliver Oliver was a friend to learning, and zealous to promote it: Cromwell, but whether the means in this instance made use of, were among the Collection the most eligible, must be left to the reader to determine. of curious -I had forgot to add, that this foundation of a college historical at Durham was opposed by the universities of Oxford Pieces, p. and Cambridge, and that it was but of a short duration. Lord. 1742. For on Richard's refignation, it of course dropped. I will mention but one instance more of the Protector's regard and encouragement of literary merit. Dr. Seth Ward, who was afterward bishop of Exeter and Sarum successively, standing candidate, in the year 1657, for the principalship of Jesus college in Oxford, lost it through means of Cromwell's pre-engagement to another. But upon being informed of the merit and learning of Ward, (who had succeeded the very learned Mr. John Greaves as astronomy professor in that university) he received and conversed with him with great freedom, and enquiring of the value of the principalship, (d) Howe's promifed to allow him the like fum annually (d). This Life by Calary, p. 19. Dr. Ward became after the restoration a thoroughpaced court-bishop, applying himself to politics, and adhering to the interest of those to whom he owed his preferments. I think he never shewed any return of kindness to the friends of Cromwell.

(PPP) He made use of the methods of kindness and condescention to his enemies.] Here are my authorities. The nobles and great men, fays Bates (for with fome few of them he had an intimacy) he delighted with raillery and jesting, contended with them in mimical gestures, and entertained them with merry collations, person and government. These were some of (e) Part ii. p. 195.

musick, hunting and hawking. When he was in the country, he used once or oftner a year, to give the neighbours a buck, to be run down in his park, and money to buy wine to make merry with (e). -- The following account, we are told, was delivered by Dr. Thomas Smith, and was first published by Mr. Thomas Hearne, in his Appendix to the Chronicon de Dunstable. I will relate a passage, that the marquis told me cone cerning the old marquis of Hartford. A little after the death of the lord Beauchamp his fon, in the year 6 1656, (which was of unspeakable grief to him) the · Protector fent Sir Edward Sidenham to him, to condole with him for the great loss he had sustained, and many fine words and compliments besides. The marquifs of Hartford would have been glad Cromwell had fpared that ceremony; but however received it in the best manner he could; and returned a suitable ac-6 knowledgment for the fame. Some time after this " Cromwell fent again to invite the marquis to dine with him: which this great and brave nobleman knew onot how to wave or excuse; considering it was in · Cromwell's power to ruin him, and all his family. 5 Therefore fent him word he would wait upon his highness. In a little time after he went accordingly, and Gromwell received him with open arms; and at dinner drank to him, and carved for him with the greatest kindness imaginable. After dinner, he took him by the hand, and led him into his drawing-room, where (only they two being alone) he told the marquis, he had defired his company, that he might have his advice what to do. For, faid he, I am onot able to bear the weight of bufiness that is upon e me; I am weary of it; and you, my lord, are a great and wife man, and of great experience, and have been much verst in the business of government; pray advise me what I shall do. The marquis was · much surprized at this discourse of the Protector's, and 6 defired

of the illustrious actions of Cromwell: actions ffill

defired again and again to be excused: telling him, he had ferved King Charles all along, and been of his private council; and that it no ways confifted with his principles, that either the Protector should ask, or he (the marquis) adventure to give him any advice. This notwithstanding would not fatisfy Cromwell, but he prest him still, and told him he would receive no excuses nor denials; but bid the marquis speak freely. and whatever he faid, it should not turn in the least to his prejudice. The marquis feeing himself thus prest, and that he could not avoid giving an answer, faid, Sir, upon this affurance that you have given me, I will declare to your highness my thoughts, by which you may continue to be great, and establish your ' name and family for ever. Our young master that is abroad (that is, my master, and the master of us all) restore him to his crowns, and by doing this you may have what you please. The Protector, no way disturbed at this, answered very fedately, that he had gone fo far, that the young gentleman could not forgive. The marquis replied, that if his highness pleased, he would undertake with his master, for what he 6 had faid. He replied again, that in his circumstances; he could not trust. Thus they parted, and the marquis had never any prejudice hereby so long as Preface to · Cromwell lived (f). Lord Clarendon speaks also of his Memoirs Gromwell's ' making addresses to some principal noble- of Oliver men of the kingdom, and some friendly expostulations P. 37. with them, why they referved themselves, and would (g) See vol. have no communication or acquaintance with him (g)? vi. p. 593 From these facts, we may judge of Cromwell's address, and his knowledge of the human heart, which by flattery is foonest of all things captivated and enfnared. His method of treating his enemies was many times also very mild and generous. 'He understood fays Burnet, that one Sir Richard Willis was chane cellor Hyde's chief confident, to whom he wrote of-

still more remarkable, as his reign was short, and ten, and to whom all the party submitted, looking on

' him as an able and wife man, in whom they con-' fided absolutely. So he found a way to talk with him: He said, he did not intend to hurt any of the party; his defign was rather to fave them from ruin: they were apt after their cups to run into foolish and ill-concerted plots, which fignified nothing but to ruin those who engaged in them: he knew they consulted him in every thing: all he defired of him was to know all their plots, that he might fo disconcert them that none might ever fuffer for them: if he clapt any of them up in prison, it should only be for a little ' time: and they should be interrogated only about fome trifling discourse, but never about the business they had been engaged in. He offered Willis whatever he would accept of, and to give it when or as he pleased. He durst not ask or take above 2000 pounds a year. None was trusted with this but his secretary · Thurlee, who was a very dexterous man at getting intelligence. Thus Cromwell had all the King's party in a net. He let them dance in it at pleasure: and upon occasions clapt them up for a short while; but onothing was ever discovered that hurt any of them (b). --- What is about to be related, will still more difplay the truth of the text. 'One day, in a gay mane ner, Oliver told Lord Brogbill that an old friend of his was just come to town. The Lord Breghill de-' firing to know, whom his highness meant? Cromwell to his great surprize, answered, The marquis of Or-" mond. The Lord Broghill protesting he was wholly ignorant of it: I know that well enough (fays the Protector;) however, if you have a mind to preserve vour old acquaintance, let him know, that I am not ignorant either where he is, or what he is doing. He then told him the place where the marquis lodged; and Lord Broghill having received this generous permission to save his friend, went directly to him, and

(b) Vel. i. p. 101.

and his revenue (QQQ) scanty.—But his govern-acquainted him with what had passed; who finding himself discovered, instantly left London; and with the first opportunity returned to the King. Soon after Cromwell being informed that the Lady Ormend was engaged in several practices against the government, and corresponded with her husband, for the better accomplishing of them, had resolved to use her with great severity; and told the Lord Broghill with a frown, the first time he saw him; you have passed your word for the quiet behaviour of a fine person: the Lady Ormand is in a conspiracy with her husband against me, though at your request, I permit her to fray in London, and allow her 2000 l. per annum. I find the is an ungrateful woman, and thall use her accordingly. Lord Broghill, who faw the Protector was thoroughly provoked, but knew that a foft answer usually appealed him, told him in the most submissive manner, That he was forry the Lady Ormind had given his highness any occasion to be displeased with her; but humbly defired to know, what ground he had for suspecting her? Enough: (fays Gromwell) I have letters under her own hand, which were taken out of her cabinet: and then throwing him a letter, bid him read it. He had no sooner perused it, than he assured the Protector with a smile, that what he had read, was not the hand of Lady Ormond, but of Lady Isabella Thyn, between whom and the marquis of Ormond, there had been some intrigues. Cromwell haflily asked him, how he could prove that? Lotd (i) Budgell's Memoirs of Broghill answered very easily; and shewed him some the Boyles, other letters from the Lady Ifabella; of whom he told P. 59. Biotwo or three stories, so pleasant, as made Gromwell graphia Bris lose all his refentment in a hearty laugh (i). (QQQ) His revenue scanty.] Whoever confiders what

Cromwell did at home and abroad; the greatness of his fleets and armies; his spies and intelligencers; his ambassadors and envoys, and the state he on some occa-

Ff 2

899. ICCz.

vernment, however, was far from being free from blame. His edict against the (RRR) episcopal

(A) Protec-April 21, 1657.

(I) World's

Mistake in

Oliver Cromwell,

fions affumed; I fay, whoever confiders his government which made so great a figure in the eyes of Europe, and is still talked of with admiration, will be assonished to find that the whole revenue of England, Scotland and Iretor's Speech, land, amounted to but 1,900,000 l. (k) His enemies moreover add, that when he affumed the government, The publick stock was five hundred thousand pounds in ready money, the value of feven hundred thousand pounds in stores, and the whole army in advance, fome four, and none under two months; fo that though there might be a debt of near five hundred thousand pounds upon the kingdom, he met with ' above twice the value in lieu of it (1).' Mr. Cowley fays, ' He found the commonwealth in a ready stock of about 800,000 pounds, and left it some two millions and an half in debt (m).'——Allowing all this to be Government true, Cromwell must have been an excellent economist.

For what prince almost, could have done so much on fo little? We may be fure there could have been no great waste of the public treasure on favourites, no needless parade, or expensive follies, when the sum to be managed for every purpose was so contracted. But the force of economy is great; its efficacy powerful; and

p. 3. (m) Difcourse concerning the of Oliver Cromwell. p. 92.

> he who spends or gives when 'tis proper, and only when 'tis fo, may do things beyond the imagination of most *. (RRR) His edict against the episcopal clergy, was very cruel.] Cromwell by nature, as I have more than once had an opportunity of shewing, was generous and humane, kind and compassionate; but when he was provoked he shewed his refentment, and made his enemies

(n) See Note feel the weight of it. With respect to religion he was no bigot (n); and yet, exasperated by the conduct of the

[·] Turning to Thurloc, I find the following estimate of the charge of a year, ending the first of November 1657. This estimate is some-

episcopal clergy was very cruel, as it deprived the cavaliers, who had so foolishly risen against him under Warstaff, Penruddock, and Grove in the west, he treated the clergy of that party very rigorously. In a declaration bearing date, October 4, 1655, we find the following prohibitions. 'His highness, by the advice of his council, doth publish, declare and order, that no person or persons aforesaid [whose estates had been sequestered for delinquency, or who had been in arms against the parliament] do, from and after the first day of January 1655, keep in their houses and families, as chaplains or school-masters, for the education of their children, any sequestered or ejected minister, fellow of any college, or school-master, nor permit any of their children to be taught by fuch, upon pain of being proceeded against in such fort, as the faid orders do direct in such cases. And that no person who hath been sequestered or ejected out of any benefice. college or school for delinquency or scandal, shall, from and after the first day of January, keep any fchool, either public or private, nor any person who after that time shall be ejected for the causes aforesaid.

thing beyond what I have given from the protector's speech; but as it has the air of exactness it possibly may deserve the attention of the public.

The charge at fea	-	11.00	-	994,500	0	4.
The charge of the army	in the	three kingd	oms -	1,132,489	0	0
The government	-	•	-	200,000	0	0
		Sum is	•	2,326,989	0	9
	The	present Reve	nue.
l.						d.
The affessment in England, Scotland and Ireland The excise and customs, estimated at 700,000 The other revenue payable into the receipt, estimated at 1,464,000 1,000 1,98,000					4
						0
					0	0
		Sum is		2,362,000	4	0

N. B. Cromwell had only 400,000 l. from his parliament towards the war with Spain. See Thurloe, Vol. iv. p. 596.

Ff 3

· And

ed them in a good measure of their maintenance,

And that no person, who for delinquency or scan-& dal, hath been sequestered or ejected, shall from and after the first day of January aforesaid, preach in any public place, or at any private meeting of any other persons than those of his own family, nor shall administer baptism or the Lords Supper, or marry any persons, or use the book of Common-Prayer, or the forms of prayer therein contained, upon pain that every person so offending in any of the premises, shall be proceeded against, as by the said orders is provided and directed. And to the end all persons concerned may take notice hereof, and avoid the danger of any of the faid penalties, his highness doth charge and command all fheriff's within their respective counties, cities and towns, to cause this declaration to be proclaimed and published. Nevertheless his highness ! doth declare, that, towards such of the said persons, s as have fince their ejection or sequestration given, or ' shall hereaster give, a real testimony of their godliness and good affection to the prefent government, fo much tenderness shall be used, as may consist with the safety and good of the nation (1)."——It would be useless to fpend words in exposing the cruelty of this declaration. Persecution is written on the face of it, nor is it capable of a vindication. We are told that some of the most considerable episcopal clergy, on the issuing forth of this decree, applied to archbishop Usher, to use his interest with the Protector, ' That as he granted liberty of conscience to almost all sorts of religions, so the episcopal divines might have the same freedom of ferv-5 ing God in their private congregations, (fince they were not permitted the public churches) according to the liturgy of the church of England; and that neither the ministers, nor those that frequented that fere vice, might be any more hindered or disturbed by his 6 soldiers. So according to their defires, continues Dr. Parr, he went and used his utmost endeavours with

(c) Harician Mifcellany, vol. v. p. 249. Mer-carius Politicus, No. C2 255. p. 5774.

nance, and of their liberty of worshiping God according as appeared best to their own under-

" Cromwell, for the taking off this restraint, which was ' at last promised, (though with some difficulty) that they should not be molested, provided they medled onot with any matters relating to his government: but when the lord primate went to him a fecond time, to eget this promise ratified, and put into writing,-" Cromwell answered him to this effect, that he had since better confidered it, having advifed whith his council about it, and that they thought it not fafe for him to grant liberty of conscience to those fort of men, who are restless and implacable enemies to him and his go-' vernment; and so took his leave of him, though with good words, and outward civility: the lord primate feeing it was in vain to urge it any farther, faid little more to him, but returned to his lodgings very much troubled, and concerned that his endeavours had met with no better fuccess; when he was in his chamber. ' he faid to some of his relations and myself, that came to see him. This false man hath broken his word with ine, and refuses to perform what he promised; well, he will have little cause to glory in his wickedness, for he will not continue long; the King will return; though I shall not live to see it, you may: the government both in church and state is in confusion, the papifts are advancing their projects, and making (p) Life of fuch advantages as will hardly be prevented (p). Uffice, p. This truly venerable primate had reason to be out of 75. humour. For whatever might have been the practices of many of the episcopal clergy, 'tis certain there were amongst them wise, pious, learned, and peaceable men, who merited a very different treatment from this which was given them by Oliver. Not to take notice that it is a very barbarous thing to prohibit men the use of those forms of address to the Deity, which they imagine are most honourable and acceptable to him. However, in justice to the Protector, it must be said, Ff4 understandings. The cavaliers had hard measure from him, as they were (sss) without that notwithstanding this declaration, he winked at, or permitted some worthy episcopalians to officiate in the public places of worship, nor do we find that they suffered any inconveniences on account of it. The books referred to in the margin will be deemed full authority 26. 69. Fol. by those acquainted with the character of their au-Lond. 1714: thors (q). So that fome tenderness was used towards fuch as were not of obnoxious characters, though it Bishop Bull, cannot be doubted but many innocent and worthy men must have received very hard measure.

(q) See Walker's Suffering's of the Clergy, part ii. Po 23, 24. Nelfon's Life of P. 29. 47. 8vo Lend.

1713.

(sss) The cavaliers had hard measure from him, being subjected to heavy taxes, &c.] Cromwell, though an enemy, had shewn favour to the cavaliers in a variety of inflances, and zealously promoted the act of oblivion whereby they obtained many folid advantages. But they could not be quiet. They were continually plotting how to bring in the young King, and restore him to what they called his right. For in the eyes of these men nations and kingdoms were patrimonial estates, and as such were to pass from father to son, without asking the consent of those who constituted them .---What made them more forward was the discontent which had arisen among their adversaries, on Cromwell's feizing the government, and exercifing the supream rule. For many zealous republicans now turned against him, and even joined with their fworn foes, to compleat his destruction. So blind is revenge! Among these were Overton and Wildman, men of parts and interest in the army (r). But nothing was concealed from the eye of Cromwell. He seized many of the conspirators, and disappointed their intended insurrections. Grove and Penrudduck appeared however in the west, and with a small body of men, carried off the judges on the circuit at Salisbury; but being pursued, were taken, and executed at Exeter. Had Cromwell stopt here, had he only punished such as had appeared in arms.

(r) See Note (zzz).

out exception, almost, rendered subject to heavy arms, or truly engaged in the plot against him, there had been no blame. Men who will venture on such exploits, must take the consequences; nor is a government to be blamed for making them examples. But provoked, Cromwell went much farther. He punished the whole body of cavaliers, and made little distinction between them. An order was made that 'all those who had ever borne arms for the King, or declared themfelves to be of the royal party, should be decimated. that is, pay a tenth part of all that estate which they had left, to support the charge which the commonwealth was put to, by the unquietness of their tem. e pers and the just cause of jealousy which they had administered.'-By another declaration, they were rendered incapable to be elected, or give their vote in the election of any person or persons to any office or place of trust or government, within the commonwealth; or to hold or execute by themselves or depu- (1) See Claties, any such office or place till his highnes's com- rendon, vol. f mand was farther known (s).' And a great number of Mercurius persons of quality were clapt up in prison, against Politicus, whom little more was to be alledged than that they had No. 276. been of the royal party. This treatment could not p. 5639. but be deemed by many, hard, and unjust. But Cromwell and his council undertook to vindicate it, in a declaration, published October 31, 1655, wherein, after taking notice of the events of the late war; the punctual performance of the articles granted to the cavaliers; and the act of grace and oblivion granted to them, in order to heal and cement, and take away all feeds of difference and separation: I say, after taking notice of these things, the declaration goes on to observe, That there can be no other construction made of the actings of that party, to the disturbance of the publick peace, and to the subversion of the government, but that they are implacable in their malice and revenge, and never to be drawn from their adhering to heavy taxes and other inconveniences, upon ac-

that curfed interest, which hath been the shedding of fo much innocent blood, and almost the ruin and destruction of these lands."—As to the act of oblivion, against which these proceedings were deemed contrary, it was answered,— That the parliament, by that act, intended not only an oblivion of the offences of the party, [the cavaliers] but that this kinde ness should be answered with obedience on their part, and produce a real change in their principles and interest, as to the common cause this great contest had been about, for otherwise this act cannot be considered as obligatory to those who gave it: and in this case 6 forbearance from outward action will not avail, to ' intitle to the benefit of the pardon, if yet there be e malice and revenge in the heart, and fuch a leaning and adhering to the old interest, that nothing is wanting in the discovery thereof, but a fitting opportunity; for as fuch men cannot in justice and ingenuity, claim the benefit of an act of favour from the supream mae gistrate, to whom they themselves be enemies, so neither is that magistrate bound in justice before God or men to give it to them, if he hath reason to believe from the course of their conversations that they are fuch, and that their intentions towards the government, under which they live, are the same as when they were in open arms against it, and is at liberty to carry himself towards them, as if no such act had been. Nay, he may proceed against them with greater feverity, inasmuch as he hath used the last means to reclaim them without fruit, and knows by experience, that nothing but the fword will restrain them from blood and violence. Then if this be the case between us and the late King's party, to wit, that they have onotoriously manifested it to the consciences of all men, that they do not only retain their old principles and fill adhere to their former interest, in direct opposition to the government established, but have been all

account of the rashness and imprudence of fome

along hatching new disturbances, and endeavouring as well by fecret and bloody affaffinations, as by open force to introduce the one, and overthrow and fubvert the other; it will not be thought strange upon any account whatfoever, that we did lately fecure fo ' many of the men of that interest, although they were onot visibly in arms upon the late insurrection; nor that we have laid a burden upon some of their estates. beyond what is imposed upon the rest of the nation, towards the defraving of that charge which they are the occasion of, with some other things which we (t) Declarahave found necessary in this time of danger to direct tion, p. 12. concerning them, for the peace and fafety of the 4to. Prinwhole (t). After this follows a clear and distinct ted at London, by Hennarrative of the plot, supported by such evidence as ap- ry Hills and peared to the government convincing.—But what John Field, was all this to the innocent?—Yes, proceeds the dehis Highners claration, 'Admit that fome of that party were as in- the Lord nocent, as they would now have it believed they were, Protector, enough hath been done by their fellows in a common 1655. cause (which hardly any of them know how to disown, which they love, and of which they glory) to draw the whole party under a just suspicion, and the confequences thereof: all that are peaceably minded in the nation are ready to fay, these are the men of whom we go in danger, and certainly it is both just and necessary, that all those of whom the people have reason to be afraid (not only as their profest enemies, but also numerous) should pay for securing the state (u) Id. ... s against that danger which they are the authors of (u). 36. - That character of difference between them and the rest of the people, which is now put upon them. is occasioned by themselves, not by us; there is nothing they have more industriously laboured in than this, to keep themselves separated, and distinguished from the well-affected of this nation: to which end

f they have kept their conversation apart, as if they

some of their party. Nor must it be forgotten

would woid the very beginnings of union, have bred and educated their children by the fequestred and ejected clergy, and very much confined their marriages and alliances within their own party, as if they e meant to entail their quarrel, and prevent the means to reconcile posterity; which, with the great pains they take upon all occasions to lessen, and suppress the esteem and honour of the English nation, in all their actions and undertakings abroad, striving withal to e make other nations distinguish their interest from it, ' gives us ground to judge that they have separated themselves from the body of the nation; and therefore we leave it to all mankind to judge, whether we ought not to be timely jealous of that separation, and to proceed fo against them, as they may be at the charge of those remedies which are required against the dangers they have bred (x).' Such are the principles on which this rigour was justified! Principles unjust and tyrannous, and fit to support the most arbitrary and destructive measures! And accordingly they have been made use of by L' Estrange professedly, to instigate the magistrate to crush the party that opposed him. - That which is fawce to a goofe, fays he, is fawce to a gander. They that thought this proceeding law-(y) Obserful and reasonable, from Cromwell to the cavaliers, vator, No. ' will certainly never think it hard in return, from a (z) See the ' rightful prince to a band of traytors (y).' It were to Debates on have been wished, some have thought, that no such principles had been acted on in a much more modern extraordinaperiod, by men who professed and gloried, in words at ry Tax on the Effates least, in afferting the cause of liberty (z). It is said of the Pathis declaration was drawn up by the lord commissioner Fiennes, once governor of Bristol, for the furrender of Torbuck's Parliamenwhich he was fentenced to death by a court-martial, but pardoned by the kindness of the Earl of Esfex, then bates, vol. viii. p. 285. lord general for the parliament. Lord Clarendon tells us, Svo. Lond. That when this declaration was fent to Cologne, the 6 King

(x) Declaration, &c. P. 38.

367.

laying an

piûs, in

tary De-

3741.

gotten here to mention his institution of major-

King caused an answer to be made to it upon the grounds that were laid down in it; and as if it was made by one who had been always of the parliament fide, and who was well pleafed to fee the cavaliers reduced to that extremity; but with fuch reflections upon the tyranny that was exercised over the kingdom, and upon the foulness of the breach of trust the · Protector was guilty of, that it obliged all the nation to look upon him as a detestable enemy, who was to (2) Vol. vi. be removed by any way that offered itself (a).' The P. 572. writer of this, it feems, was his lordship himself, who has also assumed the merit, such as it is, of most of the answers to the parliament's declarations before the war, don's Life, which have been generally given to Charles himself (b), vol. i. p.

The 'letter from a true and lawful member of parlia-263, & palment, and one faithfully engaged with it from the beginim. ning of the war to the end,' I believe is the answer intended; it exactly suiting the description given by his lordship, and should therefore be added to the lift of his writings. Sir Peter Pett, I know, in his ' Future happy state of England,' says it was attributed to Lord Holles; though I cannot find it mentioned by any writer among his works. I will conclude this note with a specimen of the answer to this declaration contained in the above letter, that it may appear how deeply Cromwell's proceeding was refented by the royal party. You have, fays the writer, cancelled all obligations of 4 truft, and taken away all possible confidence from all e men that they can ever enjoy any thing that they can call their own during this government; and having fo little pleasure lest them in life, they will prefer the lofing it in some noble attempt to free their country and themselves from the bondage and servitude they · live under, to the dying ignobly in some loathsome e prison, when you please to be afraid of them. When the despair you have put them into shall make them consider, that as the misery, calamity, servitude

and

jor-generals (TTT), who in a variety of instances and infamy under which the three kingdoms fuffer, proceed entirely from you, fo, that they will be determined by you. That the general hatred and detestation of you is such, that it is very probable that those noble patriots, whose spirits shall be raised to destroy you, shall not only reap unutterable honour from it, but find fafety in it, either from the confu-' fion that must instantly attend, or from the abhorring vour memories to those that shall survive you. If they hall perish in or upon their attempt, what a glorious fame will they leave behind them? What a sweet odour will their memories have with the present and · fucceeding ages? Statues will be erected to them, and their names recorded in those roles, which have opreserved the Bruti, the Horatii, the Fabii, and all those who have died out of debt to their country, by having paid the utmost that they owed it; their merits will be remembred, as those of the primitive mar-

(c) Letter from a true and lawful Member of Parliament, p. 62, 63.

' shall leave a greater name than a thousand: and if he is live, he shall increase it (c).'

(TTT) Major-generals who lorded it over, and opported the country.] At the same time that Gremwell had determined to decimate the cavaliers, he projected a division of the kingdom into several districts, over which he placed officers of trust and considence, who were to inspect into the conduct of the inhabitants, and treat them according to orders received from the Protector. The number of these men were eleven, distinguished by the title of major-generals, who presided over the tyrs, and their children and kindred will be always looked upon as the descendants from the liberators of their country, and esteemed accordingly; their fate

will be like his in the fon of Sirach, If he die, he counties of England, in the manner following.

Kent and Surry, Colonel Kelsey. Suffex, Hampshire, Berkshire, Colonel Goffe.

Glou-

117.

stances lorded it over and oppressed the country.

Gloucester, Wilts, Dorset, Somerset, Devon, Cornwall, General DISBOROWE.

Oxon, Bucks, Hertford, Cambridge, isle of Ely, Esfex, Norfolk, Suffolk, Lord Deputy FLEETWOOD.

London, Major-General SKIPPON.

Lincoln, Nottingham, Derby, Warwick, Leicester, Commissary-General WHALLEY.

Northampton, Bedford, Rutland, Huntington, Major

BUTLER:

Worcester, Hereford, Salop, North Wales, Colonel

Cheshire, Lancashire, Staffordshire, Colonel Worsley: rius Politi-Yorkshire, Durham, Cumberland, Westmorland, Nor- cus, No. thumberland, Lord LAMBERT.

Westminster, Middlesex, the Lieutenant of the Tower, Thurlos, Colonel BARKSTEAD (d).

The commission given to Disborowe is preserved in Thurloe's collections. As it may be acceptable to some readers, I will here insert it .- Oliver Lord Protector of the commonwealth of England, Scotland and Ireland, and the dominions thereunto belonging, to our right trusty and well beloved major-general John District, greeting. We reposing special trust and ' confidence in your fidelity, discretion, courage, experience, and conduct in military affairs, do hereby conflitute and appoint you the faid major-general Difbrowe to be major-general of all the militia forces raised and to be raised within the counties of Cornwall, Devon, Somerfett, Dorfett, Wilts and Gloucester; which faid forces you are by virtue of this commission to receive into your charge as major general, and the fame to train and exercise in arms, and to command, e lead, and conduct for the service of us and the com-6 monwealth, keeping them in good order and discif pline. And all officers and foldiers of the faid forces are hereby required to obey you as their major-general 6 for

THE LIFE OF

country.—But there was yet farther reafon

486.

for the faid fervice. And you are to observe and follow fuch directions as you shall from time to time (c) Thurloe, 6 receive from ourself. Given at Whitehall the 28th day of May, 1655. Signed Oliver P. (e)'

Part of the instructions to the major-generals were; To endeavour to suppress all tumults, insurrections. rebellion or other unlawful affemblies which shall be in the faid counties; to difarm all papifts, and fuch as have been in arms against the parliament, and all others who are dangerous to the peace of the nation; to apprehend thieves and robbers, and profecute them e according to law; to have a strict eye upon the conversation and carriage of all disaffected persons within the several counties; to permit no horse-races, cockfightings, bear or flage-plays; to compel the idle to babour, and provide employment and maintenance for s the poor and impotent. To these were added orders to encourage godliness and virtue in their constant car-* riage and conversation, and to discourage their contraries; as well as to take an exact account of what proceedings had been upon the ordinance for ejecting of signorant, insufficient and scandalous ministers and fchoolmasters (f). Moreover, all persons who had borne arms against the parliament, or that lived disfolutely, or without a calling, or at a high rate, having no visible estate answerable thereunto, were to e give bond with two furcties in fuch fums as the majorseperals should think fit (with respect to their qualisties) for their own peaceable demeanor; for revealing any plots or conspiracies that came to their knowledge and for their personally appearing at such time and place as the major-general or his deputy should appoint, and as often as they should direct; and also that they should not change their places of abode without giving notice, and declaring to the major-general or his deputy the place to which they were about to

(f) Mercurius Politicus, No. 289, D. 5851.

(g) Id. No. 258. p. 5829.

remove (g). It is very evident from these instruc-

fon to complain.—He made use of pack'd juries

tions that the major-generals had the country very much in their power: and it appears that they made use of it in the manner which the Protector intended. The cavaliers were forced to dance attendance; to submit to decimations; to have their houses searched, and their persons imprisoned. But nothing can convey to good an idea of their actions as their own accounts, which are to be found in Thurloe's papers, one or two of which I will insert. Major-general Worsley in a letter to fecretary Thurles, dated Stafford, December 8, 1655, writes as follows: Yesterday we had a meeting at this town; and I have made a good progress in our business. We have affessed divers, and the rest must expect it with all speed, I doubt not but before the five and twentyth of this inftant. I hope we shall pay our county troope out of what we have done already, and provide you a confiderable fum for other ules. We have fent out warrants to give notice to the whole county, and our day of meeting, when we shall sit upon the ordinance for ejecting of scandalous ministers. We have disarmed the disaffected in this county. Wee shall now fall of snapping some of our old blades, that will not let us be quiet. There is so few in that ordinance for scandal, that they have much adoe both here and in other countries to get a coram. I commend that to you from the commisfioners upon their defire; and alsoe in their name to believe, that what is in their power shall not be wanting to effect what they have received from his highness and council. P. S. Wee understand that Mr. Halfoe is taken at London: if foe, he may, I be-Lieve, discover divers of our Lancashire and Cheshire e gentlemen. Wee have found an estate of Penridock. that was executed, and have ordered it to be sequestered; for I have taken orders for the takeing of fecurity for all disaffected persons in that country. I hope 6 shortly to give you a good account of the rest of the ' countyes

juries on fome occasions, and displaced judges

(b) Thurloe, vol. iv. p. 300.

countyes (b). Difbrowe, another of these gentlemen, writes as follows to the protector, in a letter, dated Sarum, Dec. 18, 1655 .- I have received your letter, in reference to the lord Seymour, and have perused his to your highness; wherein I find no more than any · Cavalier in the west of England shall pretend for himfelf. I must confess I should be glad of a real change; but I humbly conceive, without some publicque declaration to the world by him of the alteration of his fpirit and principles, and of his real engagement to the present government, it will but open a door, and give occasion to the enemy to cry out of our partiality; especially if favour and respect shall be shewn to him, and denied to others, that will doe as much, if not more, than he hath done. If his spirit be such as he can cordially close with the people of God, (as capt. Burgels feems to hold forth) he will not be a-" shamed to disown that interest, wherein he formerly engaged; and for fatisfaction of friends manifest his integrity to the publick. However, for the present, the-commissioners understanding your highness's pleafure, feem willing to let him alone, untill they be afcertained, whether there be any difference betwixt him and his former practices. Yesterday we pro-ceeded upon taxing 7 or 8 of this county, amongst whom was Sir James Thynn, who was at the first a little averfe, and did plead as much innocency as my lord Seymour hath done; but, at last, having no refuge, was constrained to comply; and I think of those 8, which we have already dealt withell, the fum will -amount to 6 or 700 l. per annum. There are four more to appear this morning; and then I intend for Blandford, to attend the Dorsetsbire gentlemen, and of to Marlborough, where there are 20 more to be fummoned. In my last, I gave Mr. Secretary a list of fome names for Cornwall, Devon, Somerfet and Dorfeit, to be sheriffs; and have presented your highe nefs.

nels with 3 for Wilts, the two former being of the s last parliament, and figning the recognition. For Gloucester I must crave leave till I come upon the (i) Thurlos, place (i). But fining the Cavaliers was not the vol. iv. p. fole business of the major-generals: other employ-324. ment they had, as we find in another letter from Disbrowe to the protector, dated Wells; Jan. 7, 1655. I had not tyme by my last to give your highness an account of all my proceeds, therefore shall take the boldness at present to acquaint your highnesse, that at Briftol intimation was given me by some honest people, that fundry of the aldermen and justices were enemies to the publique interest, retayninge their old malignant principles, discountenancinge the godly, and upholding the loofe and prophane which indeed is a difease predominatinge in most corporations. Now I judged it my duty to declare against such, wherefoever I find them, but resolved to do it with as little noyse as I could; and in order thereunto I made my repair to Mr. Mayor, and acquainted him, that fuch of his bretherene I underflood were foe and foe; and defired him from me to advise them tacitly to refigne, otherwise I should be necessitated to make them publique examples. Whereupon Mr. Mayor engaged to deale faithfully with them, and, as I understand, they have taken my adwice, which will make way for honester men. There were also articles of delinquency proved against nine of the magistrates of Tewksbury, and particularly a-' gainst Hill their towne clarke: I have also dismissed them, and four of the common councell of Gloucester, for adheringe to the Scotts King's interest (k). One (k) Id. ps 396 and 6321 instance more of the behaviour of these major-generals will give the reader a tolerable good view of them. It is contained in a letter from major-general Haynes to Thurloe, dated Bury, August 15, 1655. - I am going into Norfolke to morrow, where we shall make the most use of it; [a letter from his highness] and I hope it will quicken them in their endeavours upon the election-day at hand, in which they have been "much discouraged by the potencie of the adverse par-G 2 2 tions.

(1) Thurloe,

vol. v. p.

311,

judges for refusing (uvu) to follow his directions.

ty. Yett all the strength can be gott is endeavoured to crowde in my lord-deputy [Fleetwood] amongst them, that the honest people may have some one in parliament to address themselves to. I am doing my " most to avoid the election of John Hubbert of Norwich, and Mr. Pb. Woodhouse, against whom you have fomething already by you from major Harvy, which ' it's hoped, if they should carry it here, will not pass with you (/).'-These proceedings of the majorgenerals, founded on no law, but the will of the protector, rendered them generally odious, and raised a mighty clamour against them in the kingdom. A parliament being called they were fooken against, even by court dependants, and focn afterwards abolished by Cromwell, as unacceptable and burthensome to the people. From henceforth we read of no more decima-

(UUU) He pack'd juries on occasion, and displaced judges for refusing to follow his directions.] Here are my proofs. - 'When judge Hale was on a circuit, he understood that the protector had ordered a jury to be returned for a tryal in which he was more than ordinarily concerned: upon this information he ex-' amined the sheriff about it, who knew nothing of it; for he faid he referred all fuch things to the underfheriff, and having next asked the under-sheriff concerning it, he found the jury had been returned by order from Cromwell; upon which he shewed the statute that all juries ought to be returned by the sheriff or his lawful officer; and this not being done according to law, he dismissed the jury, and would not try the cause: upon which the protector was highly disopleased with him, and at his return from the circuit, he told him in anger, he was not fit to be a judge, to which all the answer he made was, That it was very true (m).

(m) Hale's

That

rections.— He committed men illegally

That this may be true is rendered very probable by letters to Thurloe, part of which I will here transcribe. The first is from Mr. Dove, high-sheriff of Wills, dated Sarum, March 29, 1655, relating to the intended tryals for rebellion against the protector. -- ' I underfland a commission of Over and Terminer is issued out for tryall of the rebels in the west; and ther is a mistrust of my under-sheriffe. Sir, I resolve, that noe one man shall be returned in the one or other juries, but fuch as may be confided in, and of the honest well affected party to his highness, and the present government. Yf there be but enough to be found of them through the whole county (which I hope there is) it is and will be my greatest care for that business to fee it punctually done, and not trust my under- (n) Thurbee, fheriffe therewith (n). I suppose he was as good as vol. iii. p. his word, for both the juries I find highly commended 318. by the follicitor, and other of his highness's agents, in their accounts of the trials of the unhappy sufferers .-Colonel Lilburne, in a letter to the fecretary, dated Yorke, April 10, 1655, has the following passage, on a like subject. 'As for jurors, happily the law may e give liberty to choose them without the liberties of this city, both fact and act rifeing in the county, and then we shall doe pretty well: but, if otherwise, there fhall be no diligence or care wanting to pick upp fuch as are right (0).'——Practices of this nature could (0) Id. p. not but be dangerous to the fubject.——What is faid 360. in the text concerning Oliver's displacing of judges, is founded on the authority of Whitlock. Baron Thorpe, and judge Newdigate, fays he, were put out of their places, for not observing the protector's pleasure in all his commands (p). I know not, whether I ought to (p) Memo-infert under this head the displacing Whitlock and Wid-rials, p. 625. drington, commissioners of the great Seal, for refusing to proceed according to an ordinance made 'for the better regulating and limiting the jurifdiction of the Gg3

to prison, and permitted them not to enjoy (www) the benefit of the laws. He caused men

High Court of Chancery.' Possibly the protector,

however he might be mistaken, really thought his regulation for the public good, and therefore could not be blamed for difmissing such as were not to be prevailed on to concur with him therein. - These gentlemen, however, as they were deemed by the protector men of honour and abilities, were employed in other departments, and enjoyed his countenance and encouragement. His speech, on the taking away the seal from these commissioners, was remarkable. The protector, in the council-chamber, very gravely told us, fays Whitlock, that he was forry some of us could not fatisfy our own consciences, to execute the ordinance concerning the Chancery, which they were informed 6 had much good in it to the publick, but he confessed, that every one was to fatisfy himself in matters to be performed by him, and that he had not the worse opinion of any man for refusing to do that whereof he was doubtful; but in this particular the affairs of the commonwealth did require a conformity of the 6 officers thereof, and their obedience to authority, and 6 (being some of us refused to execute this act, as was enjoyned) they were compelled thereby to put this charge of the custody of the great Seal into the hands of some others, who might be fatisfied that it was their duty to perform this command, and to put the ordinance in execution (q)!' I have faid the protector possibly was not to be blamed for his conduct in this affair: the reader, however, must judge of this.

(www) He committed men illegally to prison, and permitted them not the tenesit of the laws.] The author of the World's Mistake in Oliver Cromwell' will supply me with sufficient proofs of this. 'To prove, says he, that Oliver's time was full of oppression and injustice, I shall but instance, in a few of many particulars, and begin with John Lilburne, not that I think him in any kind one that deserved favour or respect, but that equal justice is due to the worst, so well as to the best men, and that he comes first in order of time.

(q) Id. p. 626.

men to be tried before new created tribunals.

1. John, in 1649, was, by order of the then parliament, tryed for his life, with an intent, I believe, of taking him away, but the jury not finding him guilty, he was immediately, according to law, generoufly fet at liberty by those that had quarrel enough against him. This example in the parliament, of keeping to the laws in the case of one, who was a professed implacable enemy to them, ought to have been copied by Cromwell; but, in the contrary, to shew that there was a difference betwixt his and his predecessors (the long parliament's) principles, when the law had again, upon a fecond trial (occasioned by ' Oliver) cleared Lilburne, the parliament's submitting to the law was no example to him; for, contrary to law, he kept him in prison, untill he was so far spent in a confumption, that he only turned him out to dve.

2. Mr. Conie's case is so notorious that it needs but ' little more than naming: he was a prisoner at Cromwell's fuit, and being brought to the King's-Bench barr by a Habeas Corpus, had his counsell taken from the barr, and fent to the Tower for no other reason, than the pleading of their client's cause; an act of violence, that, I believe, the whole story of England doth not parallel.' This was on the 18th of May, 1655. The gentlemen thus committed, were Maynard, (r) See Mer-Twisden and Windham, men of great eminence in their curius Poliprofession, who could find no release from their impri-ticus, No. forment, but by humbly petitioning the protector (r).298. p. -But to go on .-

6 3dly, Sir Henry Vane, above any one person, was the author of Oliver's advancement, and did fo long and cordially espouse his interest, that he prejudiced himself (in the opinion of some) by it, yet so ungrate-Gg4

" ful

nals, and adjudged to death without the ful was this monster of ingratitude, that he studied to destroy him, both in life and estate, because he could not adhere to him in his perjury and falseness. The occasion he took was this: he appointing a day of humiliation, and seeking of God for him, invited all God's people in his declaration, to offer him their advise in the weighty affairs then upon his shoulders: Sir Henry taking a rise from hence offered his advice by a treatise called the Healing Question; but Gromwell, angry at being taken at his word, seized, imprisoned, and endeavoured to proceed further against him, for doing only what he invited him to 4thly, In Richard's assembly, certain prisoners in the Tower, under the then lieutenant, and fome fent thence to ferfey, and other places beyond the sea, complained of false imprisonment. Their goaler was fent for, and being required to fhew by what authority he kept these persons in hold, produceth a pae per all under Oliver's own hand, as followeth. Sir, I pray you feize fuch and fuch persons, and all others whom you shall judge dangerous men; do it quickly, and you shall have a warrant after it is done. The nature of this warrant was by Richard's affembly debated, and having first Richard's own counsell's opionion in the case, as serjeant Maynard, &c. they voted the commitments of the complainants to be illeegal, unjust and tyrannical; and that, first, because the warrant by which they were committed, was under the hand of the then (as they called him) chief magistrate, who, by law, ought not to commit any by his own warrant. Secondly, Because no cause was fliewn in the warrant; and thirdly (in the case of those sent out of the reach of a Habeas Corpus, which in law is a banishment) Because no Englishman ought to be banished by any less authority than an act of parliament. And, therefore, for these reasons they · voted verdict of a jury. These courts were stiled High voted farther, that the prisoners should be set at liberty without paying any fees or charges. But the turn-' ing out and punishing the lieutenant by the affembly (for obeying fo unjust a warrant) was prevented by (5) Wor their sudden dissolution (s).' Most of the facts here p. 12-14. recited are well known to those versed in this part of the English history, and may be established on the best authorities. But on confulting the Journals of the parliament, here referred to, I find a mistake relating to the commitments by Oliver.—On Saturday the 26th of Feb. 1658, say the Journals, Mr. Terill 'reported from the grand committee of the house for grievances and courts of justice, the state of the case, concerning Mr. John Portmans, a prisoner in the ' Tower, as it appeared to the committee; viz. That the lieutenant of the Tower, the third of February, 1657, received a letter from the late lord protector, early in the morning, directing him to apprehend Mr. " John Portmans (amongst others) forthwith: that the fame day, in the afternoon, a warrant was fent to the lieutenant of the Tower, under the hand of the late ' lord protector, to require and authorize him to apprehend and imprison Mr. Portmans: that the same ' night, or shortly after, upon that warrant, Mr. Port-6 mans was taken by a lieutenant and about fix foldiers, under the command, and by the order and direction, of the lieutenant of the Tower; and hath ever fithence remained a prisoner there, without any tryal, or other proceedings had against him.'--- On the 6 26th of March following, the warrant for the com-6 mitment and detaining major-general Overton in the ' Isle of Jersey was read; and was signed Oliver P.; and directed to the governor of the life of Jersey or his deputy; and was in these words; viz. These are to will and require you forthwith to receive into your charge the bodies of Robert Overton, major Norwood, and Sir Thomas Armstrong, and - Weston, esq;

High Courts (xxx) of justice, the terror of the

' and them detain, under secure imprisonment, in the castle of Jersey, until you shall receive further orders. from us: and, for so doing, this shall be your warrant. Given at Whitchall, the 8th of January, 1657. * These commitments were voted by the house illegal. and unjust, and the gentlemen were ordered to be difcharged from their imprisonment.'---It appears alfo from the Journal of the same day, that the committee found, 'that divers commoners of England had, by illegal warrants, been committed to prison into the islands of Fersey, and other the islands belonging to this commonwealth, out of the reach of the Habeas " Corpus.' Thus we see that Cromwell, who had opposed and punished Charles for his illegal acts, became an imitator of him, and, in some of these instances, went even beyond him: for I question whether all Charles's reign can produce so daring a violation of the right of the fubject, as his imprisoning Maynard and his brethren, for pleading in behalf of Coney their client; nor is there a greater, than the imprisoning and banishing men on his own warrant, and depriving them of the benefit of the laws made for their relief. Vain, indeed, might the unhappy sufferers have faid, were the efforts made against the King, when the effect of them was still slavery and oppression!

(xxx) The high courts of justice.] The erection of a high court of justice for the trial of Charles gave rise to many others. When the nature of the supposed crime was such as fell not under the cognizance of the common law; when the persons accused were of a quality which might incline a jury to treat them with compassion and regard; or when they had been engaged in actions popular, though illegal, it was then thought proper by those in power to erect high courts of justice, in order that offenders might not escape punishment. These courts were constituted of commissioners named by the government, who performed the several offices the Royalists, as their enemies were their judges!

of judges and juries, and determined concerning the law and the fact. The Attorney-General generally managed the evidence against the prisoners, and few escaped who were cited before these tribunals. The Duke of Hamilton, and the lords Holland and Capel, Christopher Love and Mr. Gibbons, with some others, were sentenced to die by courts thus constituted, who, probably, before another kind of judicature, would have met with a milder treatment, though, as the laws then were, they could not but be deemed offenders. --- When Cromwell came to the government, he made use of the fame methods of trial on feveral occasions: and in the year 1656, the parliament passed an act for the security of his highness the lord protector his person, and continuance of the nation in peace and fafety.' In the preamble it is faid, 'Forasmuch as the prosperity and fafety of this nation-very much dependeth, under God, upon the security and preservation of the e person of his highness; and, for that it hath manifestly appeared, that divers wicked plots and means have been of late devised and laid-to the great endangering his highness person, and the embroyling this commonwealth in new and intestine wars and feditions; therefore be it enacted, that if any person fhall attempt, compass or imagine the death of the ford protector, and declare it by open deed; or shall advisedly and malitiously proclaim, declare, publish or promote Charles Stuart, or any other person claiming from the late King; or shall aid and assist, hold intelligence with, or contribute money towards the affistance of the faid Charles Stuart, his brothers or mother, &c. then all and every the offences abovementioned shall be adjudged to be high treason: and that in all fuch cases, and upon all such occasions, the lord chancellor, the lord keeper, or lords commissioners of the great seal of England for the time being, are authorised and required from time to time,

judges!——If to all these things we add the

by warrant from his highness to issue out one or more commission or commissions, under the great seal of · England, to - &c - or any seventeen or more of them: which faid commissioners shall have authority to hear, examine and determine all matters, crimes and offences aforesaid; and also to hear and determine all misprissions of the treasons in this act mentioned, and to take order for charging the offender or offenders, with all or any the crimes aforesaid, and for the receiving their personal answer thereunto; and for examination of witnesses upon oath, and thereupon, or upon the confession of the party, or, in default of fuch answer, to proceed to conviction and final fentence, as in cases of high treason, and misprission of treason, according to justice and the merits of the cause. Commissioners were also apopointed for the same purpose in Scotland and Ireland. This act was to continue in force unto the end of the last fession of the next parliament, and no longer (t).' By this last clause it seems sufficiently evident that the framers of this law were fensible of its feverity and ill consequences. However, this seemed to give a fanction to it. But what is unreasonable never satisfies. It was urged that trials by juries were the birthrights of Englishmen; that all trials for treafon were to be had and used only according to the due order and course of the common laws of the realm, and not otherwise, upon inquest and presentment by the oaths of twelve good and lawful men, upon good and probable evidence and witness; and that if any thing be done to the contrary, it shall be void in law, redreffed and holden for error and nought: and if any statute be made to the contrary, that shall be holden for none. That to proceed against any without legal indictment, presentment and trial, in the way of the high courts of justice, was very unequitable; the commissioners themselves being both grand and petty jury,

(t) Scobel.

the violation of the privileges of (YYY)

and judges likewise, if not parties interested, to whom no peremptory or legal challenges could be made; and, finally, that fuch proceedings were contrary to Magna Charta; the petition of right; the declarations of the (u) See the parliament: and to an article in the instrument of go-Gerard, vernment which was sworn to by the protector him-Vowel, and felf (u).—How good soever these pleas might have bren, they were not suffered to be of use to the pri-vol. of State foners. Judges are generally well enough fatisfied of Tryals, the authority by which they act, and will not have it Fol. 1730. questioned. To demur to the jurisdiction, or refuse to answer, is equivalent to the clearest proof of guilt, and judgment is accordingly given. However, the protector had his end by this method of proceeding. 'He thought it more effectual, says Whitlock, than the ordinary course of tryals at the common law, and would the more terrify the offenders (x): and terrify it did; (x) Memo-for, on the erection of the last high court of justice, according to Clarendon, 'it put all those who knew how e liable they themselves were, under a terrible consternation. Whitlock would not fit when nominated as a commissioner, it being, as he says, against his judgment. This is to his reputation.

(YYY) The violation of the privileges of parliament, &c.] Cromwell feems to have had honest intentions, when he adopted the form of chusing members of parliament, which his old masters had prescribed. did not observe, therefore, the old course in sending writs out to all the little boroughs throughout Enge land, which use to send burgesses (by which method fome fingle counties fend more members to the parlia-

e ment than fix other counties do) he took a more equal way, by appointing more knights for every thire to be chosen, and fewer burgesses; whereby the number of the whole was much lessened; and yet, the e people being left to their own election, it was not,

by him, thought an ill temperament, and was then parliament, for much and for justly com-

(7) Claren- generally looked upon as an alteration fit to be more don, vol. vi. warrantably made, and in a better time (y). Indeed, P. 495. at first fight, it appears that very little room was, or could be given in this way, for bribery and corruption, whether from private hands or the publick exchequer. The first speech to the parliament that met September 3, 1654; was calculated to footh the members, as well as give them great hopes from the new government. After having told them what things he had already done, and what a prospect there was, through their means, of advancing the happiness of the nation, the protector added, Having faid this, and, perhaps, omitted many other material things through the frailty of my memory, I shall exercise plainness and freedom with you, in telling you, that I have not spoken these things as one that assumes to himself dominion over you; but as one that doth resolve to be a sellow servant with vou, to the interest of these great affairs, and to the people of these nations.' The parliament, after some needful preliminaries, fell upon business. On the 5th of September it was resolved by them that the house do take the matter of the government into debate the first business to morrow morning. On that day it was again resolved upon the question, that the subject-matter of the debate to morrow morning shall be, whether the house shall approve the government shall be in one fingle person and a parliament. Accordingly, on the three following days, this important subject was debated, wherein the courtiers and republicans exerted (z) fournals, themselves (z). Cromwell was alarmed at these proceedings, and, on the 12th of the same month, sent a message to the parliament, desiring them to meet him in the painted chamber. The members being come, he made, according to his custom, a long speech, expressing his resentment at their conduct, telling them what he expected from them, or elfe what they must trust to. Among others we find the following pasfages.

OLIVER CROMWELL.

plained of, by writers of different parties and fages. At that meeting [the opening of the parliament] I did acquaint you what the first rise was of this government which hath called you hither; and, in the authority of which you came hither. Among other things that I told you of then, I faid you were a free parliament, and so you are, whilst you own the government and authority that called you hither; for, certainly, that word implied a reciprocation, or it implied nothing at all. Indeed there was a reciprocation implied and expressed; and, I think, your actions and carriages ought to be suitable; but I see it will be necessary for me now a little to magnify my office; which I have not been apt to do. I had this thought within myself, that it had not been difhonest, nor dishonourable, nor against true liberty, no not of parliaments, when a parliament was so chosen, in pursuance of, in conformity to, and with such an approbation and confent to the government, so that he that runs might read by what authority you came hither, that an owning of your call, and of the authority bringing you hither, might have been required before your entrance into the house; but this was declined, and hath not been done, because I am perwaded scarce any man could reasonably doubt you came with contrary minds. And I have reason to believe the people that fent you least doubted thereof at all; and therefore I must deal plainly with you: what I forbore upon a just confidence at first, you necessitate me unto now; that, feeing the authority that called you is fo little valued, and fo much flighted, till some such assurance be given and made known, that the fundamental interest of the government be fettled and approved, according to the proviso contained in the return, and fuch a confent testified as will make it appear that the fame is accepted, I have caused a stop to be put to your entrance into the par-Iliament house. I am forry, I am forry, and I could and perswasions, we shall be able to form fome

be forry to the death, that there is cause for this: but there is cause, and if things be not satisfied that are e reasonably demanded, I, for my part, shall do that which becomes me, feeking my counsel from God. * There is therefore somewhat to be offered to you, that, I hope, will answer, being understood with the qualifications that I have told you of; reforming circumftantials, and agreeing in the substance and fundamentals, which is the government fettled, and is expressed in the indenture not to be altered. The making your minds known in that, by your giving your affent and subscription to it, is that which will let you in to act those things as a parliament, which are for the good of the people. And this thing shewed to you, and figned as aforefaid, doth determine the controversy, and may give a happy progress and iffue to this parliament. The place where you may come thus and fign, as many as God shall make free thereunto, is in the Lobby without the parliament ' door (a).'- In this strain spoke the protector, who, agreeably to his threats, caused a stop to be put to their entrance into the parliament house, by guards, till such time as they had subscribed the following recognition: 'I do hereby freely promise and engage, to be true and faithful to the lord protector, and the commonwealth of England, Scotland and Ireland; and fhall not, according to the tenor of the indenture, whereby I am returned to serve in this present parliament, propose, or give my consent, to alter the go-'vernment, as it is fettled in one person and a parlia(b) Journals. ment (b). This was immediately subscribed by the speaker, Lenthall, and many others; and after its being explained 'to comprehend not the whole instrument of government, but only what concerned the government of the commonwealth, as it was then fettled ' in one person and a parliament (c).' . Much the great-(e) Journals. er part of the house followed the example. However,

this

(a) Parlian.entary History, vol. xx. p. 349. 368.

fome tolerable judgment of his illegal and tyrannical actions.

this act fluck deep in the minds of the members; between whom and the protector there was fo little good will that he dismissed them at the end of five months, the term fixed by the instrument of government for their fitting, with a speech full of reproaches. Mr. Ludlow, and many others, speak loudly against these proceedings of Cromwell, and scruple not to tax them with tyranny. So foon, fays he, as this visible hand of violence appeared to be upon them [in the affair of the recognition most of the eminent affertors of the being of their country withdrew themselves, being perswaded they should better discharge their duty to the nation by this way of expressing their abhorrence of his tyrannical proceedings, than by furrendering their liberties under their own hands, and then treating with him who was possessed of the sword, to low, vol. ii. recover fome part of them again (d). Ano-p. 501. ther contemporary speaks in a like strain. These grave, necessary and important debates, says he, were ono fooner entered into, than in contempt of all privileges of parliament, which will not allow matters ' in debate to be taken notice of, the Protector, like a King, Nam impune qualibet facere, id est, regem esse, fummons them into his presence, with the highest and ' sharpest language, reproaches them for disputing his authority, by whom they were called together; requires them to renounce and disclaim that liberty, before they proceeded to farther confultation, and to that purpose delivered an instrument, without subscribing to which, the band of foldiers which guarded the door of the parliament house, would not suffer any man to enter, whereupon a major part of the parliament ' departed to their houses, and they only went in who fubmitted to the conditions, which many afterwards 6 did, who in detestation of the violence, at that time had forborne to subscribe. Thus he, who without Hh

Pof-

(e) Letter

P. 54.

the confent or privity of a dozen persons, had assumed to himself the title and sile of Protector of three kingdoms, and therefore found a general submission, because he had bound himself within a short time to call a parliament, that might fettle the government, when it was now met and possessed of the power it "was to have, because they came together upon his call, would not fuffer them to question any thing he had done, or what he should do hereafter, their sub-' mission (as he said) to his authority of summoning them, being a tacit acknowledgment of his power, which he would not endure to be argued against, without calling to mind (besides the practice of these last ill years) that by the express letter of the law, any restraint from altering or revoking an ordinance or actfrom a true and lawful of parliament itself, is void, being against the juris-Member of diction and power of parliament (e). - But this Parliament. treatment was nothing when compared with that which he gave many members returned to the parliament September 17, 1656. After it, was deemed expedient (by reason of the Spanish war) to call a parliament to meet at this time, every art was made use of usual on those occasions, money excepted, to procure a choice of such members as might fall in with the views of the Protector. Scotland and Ireland were in his own hands, and the members fent from thence were to be depended on, three only of the latter excepted, who met not with approbation (f). In England things went not so well. (g) See Nar-rative of the For though, it is faid, 182 of Gromwell's kinsmen, dependants, placemen or officers, were chosen (g), yet ment, in the were a great number of zealous republicans and anticourtiers, of different principles, returned, who wanted > known, and therefore without ceremony, admission was given to none who produced not a certificate, figned bythe clerk of the commonwealth in chancery, that he was returned to ferve in this present parliament, and approved by the council, [Oliver's] (h).' This was undoubtedly an high act of tyranny, and furpaffed any thing to be met with in our histories. The gentlemen

unap-

(f) Thurloe, voi. v. P. 4.7. (g) See Narlate Parlia-3d vol. of the Harleinot will or ability to give much interruption to the bulany, p. 44° finess and designs of the government. This was well

(b) Journals. And Thurloe, vol. v. p. 453.

unapproved were about one hundred; fifty fix of whom fent a letter to the Speaker, Sir Thomas Widdrington, which was read in the house the next day, in these words. 'Sir, We whose names are subscribed (with 6 others) being chosen, and accordingly returned to serve with you in this parliament; and, in discharge of our trust, offering to go into the house, were, at the lobby door, kept back by foldiers: which, left we should be wanting to our duty to you, and to our country, we have thought it expedient to reprefent unto you, to be communicated to the house, that we may be admitted thereinto.' After the reading this letter it was ordered That the clerk of the commonwealth in chancery be ' ordered to attend the house to morrow morning, with all the indentures of returns of knights, citizens, and burgesses, chosen to serve in this parliament." The deputy of the clerk of the commonwealth attended then with the returns, which being examined, confirmed the truth of what the secluded members had written.-The house being acquainted that the clerk of the commonwealth was himself at the door: he was called in; and by order of the house, Mr. Speaker acquainted him, That upon the perusal of the indentures, it appears, divers persons are elected, which are not returned to the house: and he was demanded by what order it was done. He returns this answer: that he received ' an order from his highness's council, that he should deliver tickets to all fuch perfons, and fuch only, as being returned to ferve in parliament, should be certified unto him, from the council, as persons by them approved: and that he did receive feveral orders of approbation for several persons; and so he made out the tickets.' Being demanded whether he had the order itself: answered he knew not whether it were at the door. But being withdrawn; and again brought in by the serjeant; he delivered in the order, subscribed by Mr. Jefforp, clerk of the council. This order being read, it was resolved the next day, ' That this house doth defire the council to give unto this house on Monday next, their reasons, why those members, who are returned from the feveral counties and boroughs Hh 2.

for members, are not approved; and why they are ". not admitted to come into the house." Accordingly on-Monday, the 22d of September, 'The lord commissioner Fienes reported by word of mouth, from the council, their answer to the order made by the house, to this effect: Whereas the parliament did desire the councilto give unto them, their reasons, why those members who are returned for the feveral counties and bos roughs for members are not approved; and why they are not admitted into the house; the council have commanded me to return this humble answer: That whereas by a clause in the government it is ordered, that the clerk, called the clerk of the commonwealth, 6 &c. as in the one and twentieth article; and by another clause in the government, it is ordained. That the persons who shall be elected to serve in parliament; ' shall be such, as are persons of known integrity, fearing God, and of good conversation: That the coun-' cil in pursuance of their duty, and according to the trust reposed in them, have examined the said returns, and have not refused to approve any who have ape peared to them to be persons of integrity to the government, fearing God, and of good conversation: and those who are not approved, his highness hath e given order to some persons to take care that they do onot come into the house.'—This was very plain language, and perfectly well understood by the members. As it appeared therefore in vain to contend with the master of legions, as there might be little disposition, it was refolved on the question by a majority of 125 to 29, 'That the persons who have been returned, from the feveral counties, cities, and boroughs, to ferve in this parliament, and have not been approved, be referred to make their application to the council for an approbation; and that the house do proceed (i) Journals. with the great affairs of the nation (i). Thus ended this affair in parliament. But the fecluded members, far enough from being fatisfied with this determination, made an appeal to the public in a remonstrance which does honor to their courage and abilities. Some parts of it I will here infert.

We believe, fay they, the rumour is now gone through the nation, that armed men imployed by the Lord Protector have prevented the free meeting and fitting of the intended parliament, and have forcibly that out of doors fuch members as he and his council funopose would not be frighted, or flattered to betray their country, and give up their religion, lives and estates to be at his will, to serve his lawless ambition. But we fear that the flavery, rapines, oppressions, cruelties, murders and confusions that are comprehended in this one horrid fact, are not fo fenfibly difcerned; or so much laid to heart as the case requires; and we doubt not but, as the common practice of the man hath been, the name of God, and religion, and formal fasts and prayers, will be made use of to colour over the blackness of the fact; we do therefore in faithfulness unto God, and our country hereby remonftrate; First, That whereas by the fundamental laws of this nation, the people ought not to be bound by ' any laws but fuch as are freely confented unto by their deputies in parliament, and it is a most wicked usurpation, even against the very laws of nature, for any man to impose his will or discretion upon another as a rule, unless there be some pact, or agreement between the parties for that intent. And whereas by the mercy of God only in preserving the fundamental law and liberty, the good people of England have beyond memory of any record preserved their estates, families and lives, which had been otherwife destroyed, at the will of every wicked tyrant; and by keeping this only, as their undoubted right, they have been kept from being brutish slaves to the lusts of their kings, who would otherwise have despoiled them of their persons, lives, and estates, by their proclamations, and the orders of themselves, and their courtiers as they pleased: and by virtue of this their undoubted right the people have commonly disputed, res fifted, and made void the proclamations of their kings, and the orders of their council-table, where they have croffed the laws unto which they have consented in their parliaments. Now the Lord Pro-Hh 3 .

testor hath by force of arms invaded this fundamental right and liberty, and violently prevented the meeting of the peoples chosen deputies in parliament. And he and his council boldly declare, That none of the peoples deputies shall meet in parliament, unless they agree to the measure of their phantalies, humours, or lusts; they now render the people such fools or beafts, as know not who are fit to be trusted by them with their lives, estates, and samilies. But he and his council that daily devour their estates, and Liberties, will judge who are fit to counsel and advise about laws to preserve their estates and liberties: thus doth he now openly assume a power to pack an affembly of his confidents, parafites and confederates, and to call them a parliament, that he may thence pretend that the people have confented to become his flaves, and to have their persons and estates at his discretion. And if the people shall tamely submit to fuch a power, who can doubt but he can pack fuch a number as will obey all his commands, and confent to his taking of what part of our estates he pleaseth, and to impose what yokes he thinks fit to make us draw in. Secondly, And whereas the parliament of ' England, confifting of the peoples chosen deputies, always have been, and ought to be the ordainers, and creators of dignities, offices, and authorities in this nation, and have always of right exercised the power of disposing even the kingly office, and authority of enlarging and restraining the kingly power, and of questioning, making void, or confirming all come missions, proclamations, charters, and patents of any of our former kings; and have questioned, censured s and judged even the persons of our kings for abusing their trufts, and invading the peoples laws, rights, and liberties; and by this means the highest officers, and the kings themselves have acknowledged their opower to be only trufted to them for the peoples welfare; and they have always dreaded the peoples par-· liaments who could call them to an account for any injustice, or violence done upon the person, or estate f of any man; and hereby the people were secured under the laws from the rapine, and oppression of the highest grandees, and courtiers; even the kings themfelves, fearing the peoples complaints in their parliaments, and well knowing the peoples custom to choose for their deputies the most known champions for their liberties, against the arbitrary powers, and injuffice of the kings and their courtiers; and none of the most wicked kings in their highest hope to erect a tyranny, ever daring fince members were fent to e parliaments by elections, to throw aside by force as many of the chosen members as they thought would onot serve their ends; they knowing it to be the undoubted right of the people to trust whom they think fit, and as much the right of every man duly chosen and trusted to meet and vote in parliament without alking their leave or begging their tickets. And although here hath been frequently fecret defigns for many years to subvert religion, liberty and property in this nation, and to that end the deligns of tyranny have attempted to destroy, sometimes the being, and fometimes the power, privileges and freedom of par-· liaments, yet the mercy of God hath almost miracu-· loufly preferved the being, privileges and authority of parliaments, and therein religion, liberty and proe perty, until the time of the Lord Protector. But now he hath assumed an absolute arbitrary sovereignty (as if he came down from the throne of God) to create in himself, and his confederates, such powers and authorities, as must not be under the cognizance of the peoples parliaments. His proclamations he declares shall be binding laws to parliaments themfelves, he takes upon him to be above the whole body of the people of England, and to judge and centure the whole body, and every member of it, by no other rule or law than his pleasure, as if he were their abfolute lord, and had bought all the people of Engand for his flaves. Doubtless, if he would pretend only to have conquered England at his own expence, and were there as much truth as there is falshood in that pretence, yet he could not but know that the right of the peoples deputies in parliament to their Hh 4

antient powers and privileges, would remain good against him, as against their publick capital enemy, whom every man ought to destroy, until by some agreement with the body of the people in parliament, fome fort of governing power in him were fubmitted unto, that hereby he might cease to be a publick enemy and destroyer, and become a king or governor ' according to the conditions accepted by the people, and if he would fo pretend, he could not be fo difcharged from his publick enmity by any conditions or agreement made with a part of the peoples chosen deputies, whilft he shut out the other part; for no part of the representative body are trusted to consent to any thing in the nation's behalf, if the whole have not their free liberty of debating, and voting in the matters propounded. If he would pretend no higher than to be our conqueror, who for peace and his own fafety's fake was content to cease from being a publick enemy, and to be admitted a governor, he could not compass those ends by forcibly excluding (as now he hath done) whom he pleased of the representative body of the people, who were to submit to him in the people's behalf; therefore either takes upon him to be fuch a conqueror as fcorns the peoples acceptance of him by their representative as their governor, and fears not to remain a publick enemy, or elfe he takes himself to be such an unheard-of sovereign, that against him the people have no claim of right, or proe perty in themselves, or any thing else; for he hath ' now declared that the people's choice cannot give any man a right to fit in parliament, but the right must be derived from his gracious will and pleasure, with that of his counsellors; and his clerks ticket only must be their evidence for it. Thus hath he exalted himfelf to a throne like unto God's, as if he were of himself, and his power from himself, and we were all made for him, to be commanded and disposed of by him, to work for him, and ferve his pleasure and ambition. Seeing therefore this total subversion of all law and right, and the distractions, miseries, blood and confusions, that will be the most certain consequences of it, and withall, remembring the late effusion of blood upon no other account than to secure religion, liberty and property, and the freedom, power and privileges of parliaments, as the bulwarks thereof; and that by those very hands who now overturn the very foundations of all liberty, right and property, and of the beings of parliaments; and our very fouls trembling at the loud cries of that fea of blood, and at the horrid clamours of the many fallified oaths and promifes ' made upon the same account.'--- 'For the acquitting therefore of their fouls, they folemnly protested and remonstrated unto all the good people of England, that the violent exclusion of the people's deputies in parliament, doth change the state of the people from freedom into meer flavery; that fuch members of parliament as shall approve the forcible exclusion complained of, or shall fit, vote and act, while many members are by force thut out, are betrayers of the liberties of England, and adherents to the capital enemies of the ' commonwealth; and that the present assembly at " Westminster, being under the awe and terror of the Lord Protector, is not the representative body of Eng-· land, nor can tax or tallage be justly or lawfully raised (8) Whitby them (k).

lock, p.

This remonstrance being ' printed was fent in great 651. white boxes some 1000 of them, to be left in several 6 houses in London, and by them to be delivered out when called for.'-But the court having private intelligence of the matter, ' got four or five of the boxes ' from the owners of the houses,' and thereby prevented their being dispersed according to the intention of the (1) Thurles, fubscribers (1). ___ I am forry to add, that many of the vol. v. p. gentlemen, who put their hands to this admirable remonftrance, were but meer talkers, and foon found a way to ingratiate themselves with the Protector, take their seats in the house, and servilely adore him whom in such terrible colours they here blacken! So uncertain are the figns of patriotism! But in justice it must be said that there were others of them who were true to their principles, and above being worked on by fear or flattery. These at length, in virtue of an article in the Humble

Possibly, however, some persons will find an

Petitien and Advice, which required that those persons who were legally chosen by a free election of the peoe ple to serve in parliament, should not be excluded from fitting therein, but by judgment and confent of the house whereof they were members,' were also admitted to their feats January 20, 1657, O. S. The oath taken by them on this occasion, was in these words. · I A. B. do, in the presence, and by the name of God Almighty, promise and swear, that, to the uttermost of my power, in my place, I will uphold and maintain the true reformed, protestant, christian religion, in the purity thereof, as it is contained in the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testament, and encourage the profession and professors of the same; and that I will be true and faithful to the Lord Protector of the commonwealth of England, Scotland and Ireland, and the dominions and territories thereunto belonging, as chief magistrate thereof; and shall not contrive or defign, or attempt any thing against the person or ' lawful authority of the Lord Protector; and shall endeavour, as much as in me lies, as a member of par-· liament, the preservation of the rights and liberties of the people (m).'--Thus was the wife taken in his own craftiness! Men under a deep fense of injury, were now admitted into the house, who, it might have been foreseen, would use their utmost endeavour to embarrass and perplex that government, which they had looked on and treated as usurped and tyrannical. It must not be omitted that this parliament was dissolved also in great resentment by the protector. These were the high and arbitrary proceedings of Cromwell; proceedings which might eafily induce a very ingenious (n) Liberty writer to observe that ' he who hated the tyrant, adand Right; 6 mired the tyranny (n).' For what more odious in the 39. 8ve. Lond. 1747. reign of the conquered King, than these? What more opposite to the principles of liberty and freedom? 'In the reign, or rather under the tyranny, of this fingle part i. p.

(m) Journais.

an apology for some of these (zzz) proceedings,

hand, the whole government and administration contradicted the national constitution; but this contradiction, was planned by a craft and policy as dexterous, as it was new; and carried on by a genius as bold, ' as cunning. Cromwell, when mounted to the head of affairs, found the materials of liberty and freedom c rooted in the people, but faw, that these materials were without form, without orders, and without laws, to bind and fecure them. The people were powerful, but ignorant and divided; divided in opinion, and igonorant of true government and real fecurity. Gromwell therefore applied himself to the times; encouraged, discountenanced, protected and oppressed by turns, different fects and parties; and thus artfully keeping them divided in their religious and civil views, ' prevented the nation from uniting in any thing that was natural and proper to freedom and liberty. The fame army which had conquered for the people, he (0) Liberty taught by mutilation, augmentation, largeffes and pri- and Right, vileges, to oppress the people (o).'---How far this parti. p. is a just representation, the foregoing notes will enable 39. the reader to determine.

(ZZZ) Some may find an apology—in the situation and circumstances of the Protector.] Civil war is naturally more subject to rigour, says Mr. Ascham, than other wars: because they who yesterday were enemies, would be inhabitants always. The conqueror suspects that these will be the first infringers of his new laws; the violation of which ought at the beginning to be severeliest censured, as of dangerous consequence.

Wherefore for these reasons though the usurper thought (p) Consunot of establishing himself in an absolute jurisdiction, fions and yet at last he will find himself obliged to secure his of Governconquest by the same means he obtained it. And ments, p.

• Dido gave Eneas the true reason of the same case (p). 97. 12mo. Lond. 16, 9.

ceedings, in the fituation and circumstances of

Res dura & regni novitas me talia cogunt Moliri. & late fines custode tueri.

VIRG.

- My cruel fate, And doubts attending an unfettled flate, Force me to guard my coasts ----

This had long before, been taught by Mochiavel, in the following words: 'When a prince would keep his fubjects united and faithful, he must not heed the re--c-proach of cruelty; for if he makes a few examples of fustice, he acts with less cruelty than those who, through an excefs of mercy, fuffer many disorders to e arise, which occasion rapine and murder. Now these are prejudicial to the whole fociety; whereas particular executions, which are ordered by the prince, affect only particular men. Besides, all new governments are exposed to so many dangers, that it is impossible

(q) Prince, c. 17. Con- 6 for a new prince to avoid the scandal of being cruel. fult also A-Thus Virgil makes Dido fay, melor de la Houffay's notes on the place.

Res. &c. (0)

If ever any prince upon earth had reason to act on these principles, it was Cromwell. Without some acts of severity what could he have done? How tottering would have been his throne? How precarious his life? The cavaliers, the presbyterians, the republicans, and the fifth-monarchy-men were all his foes, and even his most intimate friends did not approve his management in a variety of respects. Mr. St. John, between whom and the Protector there had been the nearest union, highly disliked his setting up himself. ' He, [St. " John lays Mr. Thurlee, was fo far from advising Oli-" ver to let up himself, that to the best of my knoweledge and observation he was a great enemy to it, and hath often to me spake against it. And as for that 6 called

Ire-

of the Protector.—Had he accepted the king,

s. called the Instrument of Government, I never spake with my Lord St. John, either about the whole, or any s part of it (nor ever heard that any body else did) until some months after it was published in print, when going to visit him after a long and dangerous sickness, he told me, he had just then read our government; and taking it up in his hands, he cast it from him in great dislike, and sayed, is this all the fruit the nation shall have of their warre? or words to that purpose; and then tooke occasion to speak much against it. And as he had nothinge to doe in settinge up this government, foe neither was there, foe farr as I knowe or have heard, any communication of counfells between Oliver and him, mediately or ymmediately, touchinge the management of any part of the publique affairs, my Lord St. John always refusinge to meddle in any thinge, but what concerned his place as a judge; and in that he refused to proceed upon any of the laws made under that government; for which he was complayned of to the counfell, and it was ime puted to his example, that the judges refused to act upon the last high court of justice. Nor was hee (to my knowledge) advised with in the Petition and " Advice. The truth is, that my Lord St. John was so far from being a confident, that some, who loved and valued him, had fomething to doe to preserve him (r) Thurunder that government (r). In a letter to Henry loe, vol. vii. Cromwell dated 16 December, 1656, he fays, 'His high. P. 914. e nesse meetes with his-tryals here at home of all forts. beinge under daylye exercises from one hand or other; and I wish he may not have occasion to say, My familiar friends, in whom I trusted, have lifted up the (s) vol. v. heele against me (1).' It appears also from a variety p. 708. of Mr. Secretary's letters, that the Protector's government was clogged with great difficulties, and that the opposition made to it was fierce and violent. In a letter to Henry Cremwell; then major-general of the army in kingship, which was offered by his parliament,

Ireland, dated 20th May, 1656, he fays, 'Bleffed be God, that all things remain quiett in Ireland; foe they doe al-' foe here. Both is very much against the intentions of enemies of all forts, who have their daily meetinges for begettinge trouble. The Spanyard, cavaleir, papilts and levellers, are all come into a confederacy. What monstrous birth this wombe will bring forth, I cannot tell. They threaten hard, but I perceive they are not vet quite ready. The commonwealths men looke also for a fudden turne, and hope they shall play next (t). In another letter written to the same 16 June, 1656, he fays, ' Wee are yet very much troubled with the fifth-' monarchy-men and the levellers, who have their confrant meetinge to put us in blood. By the levellers, I meane those, who pretend to a republique or popular forme of government.——It is certain it doth behove us to have a watchful eye upon that interest (u).'-There was reason for it. Algernon Sydney (a name ever venerable!) called Cromwell, as he said on his tryal, A tyrant every day of his life, and acted against him ' too (x).' And to fuch a height of resentment had some warm men of the party carried it, as to join with their old and sworn foes in order to destroy him. 'The e levellers, Mr. Thurloe tells the same gentleman, in a letter dated December 9, 1656, are very buiffie, and are in perfect conjunction with the Kinge of Spayne. The part they have first undertaken, is to affasinate my Lord Protector, and have laid the way of doing it. This I know with as much certeintye, as that vour lordship is in Ireland. I trust the Lord will disfapoint them, as he hath done; but wee fee hereby ' the spirit of these men (y).'—With regard to his (y) Vol. w. parliaments after his assuming the protectorate, they were composed of men, a good part of whom were his ill-willers. 'In the debates, concerning Cromwell's accepting the crown, some of the cavalier party, or rather their children, came to bear some share. They (:) Vol. v. P. 45.

(a) Id. p.

(x) Tryal, p. 33, Lond. Folio, 168;

P. 694.

ment, a firmer fettlement and a milder ad-

were then all zealous commonwealths-men, according to the directions fent them from those about the King. Their bufiness was to oppose Cremwell on all demands, and fo to weaken him at home, and expose him abroad. When some of the other party took notice of this great change, from being the abettors of prerogative to become the patrons of liberty, they pretended their education in the court, and their ob-' ligation to it had engaged them that way; but now fince that was out of doors, they had the common orinciples of human nature and the love of liberty in them. By this means, as the old republicans affifted and protected them, fo at the same time they strength. oned the faction against Cromwell. But these very men s at the restoration shook off this disguise, and reverted to their old principles for a high prerogative and abfolute power. They faid they were for liberty, when it was a mean to diffress one who they thought had no ' right to govern; but when the government returned to its old channel, they were still as firm to all preroga- (z) Burnet, tive notions, and as great enemies to liberty as ever (z).' vol. i. p. 70. In certain conjunctures this may again happen, notwithstanding the smooth talk of coalition or extinction of parties!

Mr. Maidstone speaking of the Protector's first parliament, fays, 'The house consisting of many disobliged persons (some upon the king's account, and others upon a pretence of right to sit upon the former soundation, as not being legally, though forceably, dissolved; and others judging that the powers given by the instrument of government to the Protector were too large; professing that though they were willing to trust him, yet they would not trust his successors with so large a jurisdiction) sell into high animosities; and after sive months spent in framing another instrument instead of the former (which they said they could not swallow without chewing) they were ministration might have taken place: but his most by the Protector dissolved (a).' Mr. Whielock informs (a) Thurloe, vol. i. P. us, 'That this parliament continued their debates touch-765. ing the government, wherein many things were spoken, which gave great offence to the Protector and his council, and cause of suspicion that no good was to be expected from them (b). Many of these same (8) P. 610. men, in fpight of court influence, were chosen in the next parliament, and Cromwell, that matters might go on the more fmoothly, ordered them to be denied admittance. In pursuance however of the humble Petition and Advice, as before mentioned, they afterwards took their feats, and gave the Protector great vexation' by spurning at the new erected house of Lords, and controverting their title. I need not add that the government was continually alarmed with plots and confpiracies, and that juries were but ill disposed to do justice on state criminals. These are some of the chief arguments that may be urged in favour of the violent' and illegal acts of Cromwelli His fituation and circumstances were perplexed and dangerous, and would he fecure himself, or those who depended on him, feverity and rigour feemed requifite. What would youhave one in my station do? faid he to some who talked to him about his excelles and usurpation. He was well answered, says Mr. Gordon, Sir, we would have nobody in your flation. To vindicate murder conti-"nues this writer, from the necessity of committing it," in order to conceal robbery; is to argue like a murderer and a robber; but it is honest logic, to reply, Do not rob, and then you need not be tempted to murder; but if you will do one; and confequently both, remember that punishment does or ought to follow crimes, and the more crimes the more punishment. If, by a repetition of crimes, you become too mighty to be punished, you must be content to be accursed and abhorred as an enemy to human race; you' must expect to have all men for your enemies, as you

6. 210

most intimate friends (AAAA) opposing, he, con-

are an enemy to all men; and fince you make sport of the lives and liberties of men, you must not wonder, nor have you a right to complain, if they have all of (c) Discour-

them memories and feeling, and fome of them cou-fes on Taci-tus, vol. iv. rage and fwords (c).' It would be injustice however to p. 207. Cromwell, not to add, that his feverities were but few, 12mo.

and those exercised only on real criminals, as the laws Lond. 1753. then flood.

(AAAA) He refused the offered kingship.] Cromwell was no enemy to the name or office of King. He had helped to pull down and punish Charles, but he was difposed enough to sit on the throne. The times then would not bear it. But in a few years he thought feriously of the affair, and was inclined to try the experiment. Prudence however restrained him. But when he had got a parliament to his mind, as that called in 1656, in the beginning was, it was no longer to be delayed. 'The fettlement of the nation was deliberated on, and a writing framed, which the parliament stiled . The humble petition and advice of the parliament of Eng-' land, Scotland and Ireland to his highness.' first business of it was, says Whitlock, for the Protector to have the title of King,' 'This petition and advice was prefented to his highness by the house, ' and he defired that a committee might be appointed to confer with him about it (d).' Accordingly a com- (d) P. 655. mittee was appointed, who on the 16th of April, 1657, · Had audience of his highness, and gave him such reafons as he declared to be weighty, and to require de-' liberation, and therefore defired fome time till the e next afternoon to give answer to them (e). In this (e) Journals, conference it was urged by the lawyers, particularly by the lord chief justice Glinne, . That the office of a

King was a lawful office, and a title too, approved of by the word of God: that it was an office that had been exercised in the nation, from the time of its being a nation, and that there never had been a quar-

contrary to his own inclinations and supposed interest,

rel with the office, but the male administration. The name of King, faid he, is a name known by the law, and the parliament doth defire that your highe ness would assume that title. These are the grounds why the parliament make it their humble advice and request to your highness, that you would be pleased to affume that title; and I think there is something more in it: you are now Lord Protector of the three nations by the Instrument, and there is a clause of this government that you should govern according to law, and your highness is sworn to that government. The parliament doth apprehend that it is almost impossible for your highness to answer the expectation of the peoe ple to be governed by the laws, because you are so tied up, that neither they can rationally cail for it, nor you conscientiously do it, and so there is neither Lord Protector, nor the people upon a sure establishment. For here stands the case: a King hath run through so maony ages in this nation, and hath governed the nation by that title and flyle, that it is known to the law; for the law of the nation is no otherwise, than what hath been a custom to be practifed, as is approved by the people to be good. That's the law, and nothing else, excepting acts of parliament. And now they have been governed by that title, and by that minister, and by that office, if so be your highness should do any act, and one should come and fay, My Lord Protector, why are you fworn to govern by the law, and vou do thus and thus as Lord Protector ?- Do I ? Why how am I bound to do? -- Why, the King could not have done fo .-- Why, but I am not King, I am not bound to do as the King, I am Lord Protector; shew me that the law doth require me to do it as Protector; if I have not acted as Protector, thew ' me where the law is. - Why you put any one to a flumble in that case.

interest, declined it; and after experiencing many

'This is one thing that I humbly conceive, did flick in the parliament as to that particular. Another thing is this: you are Protector, which is a new office not known to the law, and made out of doors: you are called upon, that you would be pleased to accept the office of a King, that is, by the whole people. It's the first government that fince these troubles hath been tendred by a general and universal consent of the e people. Another thing is this, -If any man should i find fault with them and fay, why how came you to make governments in this case? the answer is, -We are a parliament, and have your fuffrage; you have ever trusted us with all your votes, and we will justify it: but besides we have not done it neither; we have but fettled it upon the old foundations. Then ' the kingship; however some may pretend a King's prerogative is fo large we know it not, it is not bounded.—But the parliament are not of that opi-6 nion.—The King's prerogative is known by-law: if he should expatiate it beyond the duty, that is the evil of the man: but in Westminster-hall the King's prerogative was under the courts of justice, and was bounded as well as any acre of land, or any thing a man hath, as much as any controverly between party and ' party. --- And therefore the office being lawful in its anature, known to the nation, certain in itself, and (f) Monarconfined and regulated by the law, and the other of p. 16. And fice not being fo, that was a great ground of the rea. Parliamenfon why the parliament did fo much infult upon this tary History, office, not as circumstantial, but as essential (f).'-What force there is in all this the gentlemen of the long robe can best determine. 'Tis certain it would not have been judged found doctrine by those who possessed the supream authority of the commonwealth of England, after the death of Charles .- Lord Broghill, after mentioning fome things of a like nature, proceeded to the advantages which would accrue to his highness and 1 1 2

484

THE LIFE OF

many troubles and vexations in his government,

the people in accepting the crown which was then ten-

(g) See Clarendon, vol. vi. p. 589.

dered .- ' By your highness's bearing the title of King, ' faid he, all those that obey and serve you, are secured by a law made long before any of our differences had ' a being, in the Ild Hen. 7 (g), where a full provision is made for the fafety of those who shall serve whoever is King: 'tis by that law that hitherto our enemies have pleaded indemnity; and by your affuming what is now defired; that law which hitherto they ' pretended for their disobedience, ties them even by their own profession and principles to obedience. And I hope taking off all pretences from so numerous a e party may not be a thing unworthy confideration. 'That law feems very rational; for it doth not provide for any particular person or family, but for the peace and safety of the people, by obeying whoever is in that office and bears that title. The end of all govern-" ment is to give the people justice and safety; and the best means to attain that end is to settle a supream magistrate. It would therefore seem very irrational, that the people having attained the end, should decline that end only to follow the means, which are but conducing to that end; fo that if the title and office of King, be vested in your highness, and that thereby the people enjoy their rights and peace, it would be little less than madness, for any of them to cast off ' those bleffings, only in order to obtain the same ends ' under another person. There is, added his lordship, ' at present but a divorce between the pretending King and the imperial crown of these nations; and we know that persons divorced may marry again; but if the person be married to another, it cuts off all hope: · These may be some of those reasons, which invited the parliament to make that defire, and give that ad-' vice to your highness of assuming the title of King. 'There is another, and a very itrong one, which is, that now they have actually given you that advice;

ment, he died (of a double tertian ague) on the

and the advices of parliaments are things which always ought, and therefore I am confident will carry with them very great force and authority: nor doth this advice come fingly, but accompanied with many other excellent things, in reference to our civil and foiritual liberties, which your highness hath borne a iust and signal testimony to. It is also a parliament, who have given unquestionable proofs of their affection to your highness; and who, if listned to in this (b) Clarenparticular, will be thereby encouraged to give you don, p. 27. ' more (h).'—These arguments no doubt had great and p. 88. force with Cromwell, who long ago had thought much (i) See note on the subject (i). To settle and secure the peace of (ww). the nation, to conciliate the minds of the adverse party, and establish himself and family on the throne in a legal manner, were indeed worthy both the ambition and public-spiritedness of the man. But his situation required caution; he had difficulties to encounter, and therefore took time to ballance. This will be best explained by the following quotations. Mr. Maidstone tells us, 'That the Protector would have closed with the parliament, as he thought, in this affair, not out of lust to that title, (I am perswaded, says he,) but out of an apprehension that it would have secured. in a better way, the nation's fettlement: but the party, to whom the Protector ever professed to owe himself 6 (being of the generality of his standing friends) rose ' so high in opposition to it (by reason of the scandal, that thereby would fall upon his perfon and profession) as it diverted him, and occasioned him to take in-' vestiture in his government, though from them, yet (k) Thurlos. under his former title of Protector (k).'- It appears vol. i. p. from a letter of Thursoe's to Henry Cromwell, dated 21 765. April, 1657, that the Protector deliberated much on the affair, and kept every body in suspence about it. · Certainly, fays he, his highness hath very great difficulties in his owne minde, although he hath had the

the third of September, one thousand fix hundred clearest call that ever man had; and for ought I fee, the parliament will not be perswaded, that there can be any fettlement any other way. The title is not the question, but it's the office, which is knowne to the laws and this people. They know their duty to a Kinge, and his to them, Whatever else there is will be wholly new, and be nothing else but a probationer, and upon the next occasion will be changed ' againe. Besides, they say, the name Protector, came in by the fword out of parliament, and will never be the ground of any fettlement; nor will there be a free e parliament foe long as that continues; and as it favours of the fword row, foe it will at last bringe all thinges to be military. These and other considerations, make men, who are for fettlement, fleady in their refolutions as to this government now in hand; onot that they lust after a Kinge, or are peevish upon any account of opposition; but they would lay foundations of libertye and freedome, which they judge this the next way to. My Lord Deputy [Fleetwood] and General Desbrowe, oppose themselves with all earnestness against this title, but think the other things in the petition and advice are very honest. The other gentleman [Lambert I suppose] stands at dis-' tance, has given over his opposition, and lets thinges take their owne course. Many of the soldiers are not only content, but are very well fatisfied with this ' change. Some indeed grumble, but that's the most. for ought I can perceive. And furely whatever refo-· lutions his highness takes, they will be his owne, there beinge nothing from without, that should be any con-Thurloe, & streint upon him, either to take or refuse it (1).'-On the 5th of May the Secretary informs the same gentleman, that Fleetword and Desbrowe seemed to be very much fixed against the Protector's beinge King, ' And fays he, speak of nothing but giving over their commands: and all imployment, if he doth accept that title;

vol. vi. p. 2 '9.

dred fifty-eight; aged somewhat more than fifty-nine years and four months. By Elizabeth, title; others also, speak the same language; so that (m) Thurloe, vol. vi. our difficulties are many (m).

But Cremwell, who had been used to difficulty and opposition, was not easily to be daunted. He took those measures which prudence suggested, and endeavoured to win over his old friends by rallery and perswasion. From time to time he delayed giving his answer on this important subject, and tried by 'all possible means, says Ludlow, to prevail with the officers of the army to approve his design; and knowing that lieutenant-general Fleetwood and col. Destrowe were particularly averse to it, he invited himself to dine personally with the colonel, and carried the lieutenant-general with him, where he began to droll with them about mo-' narchy, and speaking slightly of it, said it was but a feather in a man's cap, and therefore wondered that men would not please children, and permit them to enjoy their rattle. But he received from them, as col. Desbrowe fince told me, such an answer as was not at all futable to his expectations or defires. For they assured him there was more in this matter than he perceived; that those who put him upon it were ono enemies to Charles Stuart; and that if he accepted 5 of it, he would infallibly draw ruin on himself and friends. Having thus founded their inclinations, that he might conclude in the manner he had begun, he told them they were a couple of scrupulous fellows, and so departed. The next day he fent a message to the house, to require their attendance in the painted chamber the next morning, defigning as all men bes lieved, there to declare his acceptance of the crown. But in the mean time meeting with col. Desbrowe in the great walk of the park, and acquainting him with his resolution, the colonel made answer, that he then gave the cause and Cromwell's family also for lost; s adding, that though he was resolved never to act Ii 4 against beth, his only wife, he had feveral children, of whom fix furvived him, viz. two fons against him, yet he would not act for him after that ' time; so after some other discourse upon the same subject, Desbrowe went home, and there found col. Pride, whom Cromwell had knighted with a faggotflick; and having imparted to him the design of Cromwell to accept the crown, Pride answered he shall onot: Why, faid the colonel, how wilt thou hinder (n) Ludlow, 6 it? To which Pride replied, get me a petition drawn, and I will prevent it (n).'—A petition was drawn, and by colonel Majon, in the name of divers officers of (0) Journals, the army, delivered to the house, May 8, 1657 (0). The contents of it were to this purpose: 'That they 6 had hazarded their lives against monarchy, and were fill ready so to do, in defence of the liberties of the f nation: that having observed in some men great endeavours to bring the nation again under their old ' fervitude, by pressing their general to take upon him the title and government of a King, in order to deflroy him, and weaken the hands of those who were faithful to the publick; they therefore humbly defired that they would discountenance all such persons and endeavours, and continue stedsast to the old cause, for the preservation of which, they for their parts, were most ready to lay down their lives .- This pe-' tition was subscribed by two colonels, seven lieutenant-colonels, eight majors, and fixteen captains, who with fuch officers in the house as were of the same opinion, made up the majority of those relating to that part of the army which was then quartered about the town. It's difficult to determine whether the house or Cromwell was more surprized at this unexpected address; but certainly both were infinitely disturbed at it. As foon as the notice of it was brought to · Cremwell, he fent for lieutenant-general Fleetwood, ' and told him, that he wondered he would fuffer fuch a petition to proceed fo far, which he might have

' hin-

10!- ii. p. 586.

and four daughters. 1. Richard his fuccessor, married to the eldest daughter of Richard hindered, fince he knew it to be his resolution not to accept the crown without the confent of the army; and therefore defired him to haften to the house, and to put them off from doing any thing farther therein. The lieutenant-general immediately went thither, and told them that the petition ought not to be debated, much less to be answered at this time, the contents of ' it being to desire them not to press the Protector to be King, whereas the present business was to receive his answer to what had been formerly offered him, and therefore defired that the debate of it might be e put off, till they had received his answer. To this ' the house having consented, they received a message from Gronwell, that instead of meeting him in the painted chamber, which was the place where he used to give his confent, they would meet him in the banquetting-house: so the members came to Whitehall, and Cromwell with great oftentation of his felf-denyal (p) Ludlow, refused the title of King (p).' This refusal was on vol. ii. p. the 12th of May, 1657. The conclusion of the speech 589. made by the Protector on this memorable occasion, was in these words: 'I should not be an honest man, if I should not tell you, that I cannot accept of the government, nor undertake the trouble and charge of it; which I have a little more experimented than; every body, what troubles and difficulties do befall ' men under fuch trufts, and in fuch undertakings: I ' fay, I am perswaded to return this answer to you; that I cannot undertake this government, with the title of King: and that is my answer to this great and weighty business (q).'- Mr. Thurlie's account of (q) Journal. this affair, written foon after it was transacted, to Henry Cromwell, as it in a good measure confirms the above relation of Ludlaw's, will, I believe, not be unacceptable to the reader. 'His Highnesse, faith he, hath declared that he could not give his confent to the par-6 liament's

490

See Appendix.

p. 281.

Richard Major, Esq *; 2. Henry, who married a daughter of Sir Francis Russel of Chip-c liament's advice, because of the title Kinge. I e perceive this hath strucke a great dampe upon the fpirits of some, and much raised and elevated others. 4. His Highnesse was pleased upon the Wednesday and "Thursday before, to declare to several of the house, that he was resolved to accept it with that title; but ight in the very nicke of tyme he took other resolutions, the three great men professinge their great unfreenesse to act, and fayd, that ymmediately after his acceptance thereof, they must withdraw from all pub-6 lick ymployment, and foe they believed would feverall other officers of quality, that had been engaged all · alonge in this warre. Besides, the very morning the · house expected his Highnesse would have come to have given his confent to the bill, fome 26 or 27 officers came with a petition to the parliament, to defire them not to presse his Highnesse any farther about kingship. The petition was brought to the barr by bieutenant-colonel Mason, who was the cheise man, who promoted it, and went up and down from man to man to get hands thereunto. The petition was onot read, but layed by, and fome moved, that the house would take it into their consideration, as a breach of priviledge; but that was neither thought (r) Vol. vi. ' fit to be hearkned unto. It is hard to gueffe what ' will be done next (r).' However, it was on the 22d of May resolved by the parliament that, instead of the paragraph relating to the title of King in the humble petition and advice, the following clause should be inferted: viz. 'That your Highness would be pleased, by and under the name and style of Lord Protector of the commonwealth of England, Scotland and Ire-· land, and the dominions and territories thereunto be-4 longing, to hold and exercise the office of chief ma-' giftrate of these nations; and to govern according to this petition and advice, in all things therein con-' tained; penham in Cambridgeshire. His daughters were, 1. Bridget, married to commissary general Ireton, and afterwards to lieutenantgene-stained; and in all other things according to the laws (1) Journals.

And Thurford There of these nations and not otherwise (1). On the loc, vol. vi. 25th, the humble petition and advice being presented p. 310. by the parliament, was folemnly fworn to by his High-nefs, who with great pomp was then anew inaugurat-Whitlock's ed (1)—Thus Cromwell was baulked in his hopes of account of the diadem by his near relations and intimate friends! it in note Men of principle we may suppose, who chose rather (H). to disoblige him, and forfeit their employments than to build again what they had destroyed. Rare examples of integrity. -- Had the crown been placed on the head of the Protector, in pursuance of the advice of the parliament, 'tis not improbable it might have strengthned his own government, and enabled him to transmit to (" See the posterity many very valuable priviledges (u). But for humble Pewant of this, his house of peers was of no weight; his tition and Advice. army was necessary, but troublesome; and he was perpetually exposed to the clamours or conspiracies of several factions. - Certain 'tis, it was eligible in his own eye, and in the eye of Thurloe, and therefore it may well be supposed they saw many advantages in it. It appears at first fight that it would have restored the constitution, as founded on an original contract. As mention has been made more than once of Cromwell's house of lords, 'tis proper the reader should have some information concerning them. The fecond article of the petition and advice recommended the calling of parliaments confifting of two houses. This fuited well with the title of King, which was at first intended for the Protector; and probably, if that had been assumed, many of the antient nobility and gentry would have been pleased to have had seats in the upper house. But though the crown was refused, the project of a house of lords was continued. The number was not to exceed feventy.

general Fleetwood. 2. Elizabeth, wife to John Cleypole, Esq; 3. Mary, married to ford Fauconberg. 4. Frances, wife to Mr.

feventy, nor to be less than forty. Their nominations was placed in the Protector, with the approbation of the house of commons. Cromwell was under some difficulty about the choice. Some were fit, but not willing to ferve; others willing and defirous, but very unfit. At length, on the 10th of December, 1657, another house was nominated, and writs issued out for summoning the members of it; who on the 20th of 7anuary following, fat in that which was formerly the house of lords. The number of the members of this house were fixty two, among whom were the earls of Manchester, Mulgrave, and Warwick; the lords Say and Sele, Fauconberg, Wharton, Eure, and Howard, afterwards earl of Carlifle; the viscount Life, eldest fon of the earl of Leicester, the lord Brogbill, and the earl of Coffils; besides many gentlemen of the best families, fuch as Montague, Ruffel, Holart, Onflow, St. John, Pierpoint, Crew, Popham, Hampden, and others. Intermixed with these were men who had risen by their own valour and interest from very small beginnings and mean employments; of which fort were Jones, Pride, Hewfon, Barkstead, Whalley, Goff, Berry and Cooper. To these were added the Protector's two sons, his sons in-law Cleypole and Fleetwood, the commissioners of the Great Seal, and of the treasury, with others of near relation to the court (*). All the old nobility, lord Eure excepted, refused to sit in this new assembly, on account, I suppose, of the mean original of some of the company, or of the authority by which they were convened. -However, they did nothing of any importance. The fecluded members being admitted into the house of

com-

^(*) Walkly's New Catalogue of Lords, &c. and fecond Narrative of the late Parliament, &c. printed in the 5th year of England's flavery under its new monarchy. 4to. 1658.

Rich, grandson of the Earl of Warwick, and afterwards to Sir John Russel, of Chippenham, in Cambridgeshire.

In

commons, as before observed, turned all things against the court; refused any intercourse with the new house of lords, and behaved fo ill in the eye of the protector, that, in great heat, he dissolved them. This was the last parliament that fat during Cromwell's life, "he being compelled to wrestle with the difficulties of his place, fays Mr. Maidstone, so well as he could, without parliamentary affiftance, and in it met with fo great a burden, as (I doubt not to fay it, drank up his fpirits, of which his natural conflitution yielded a fpirits, of which his natural condition yield. This (2) Thurloe, vast stocke) and brought him to his grave (u). This (2) Thurloe, vol. i. p. 766. feems to confirm what Burnet fays, that it was gee nerally believed that his life and all his arts were exhausted at once, and that if he had lived much (x) Vol. i. longer, he could not have held things together (x). p. 68. Mr. Corolly observes, 'that he seemed evidently to be e near the end of his deceitful glories, and his own ar-(y) Difcourse my grew at last as weary of him as the rest of the on the gopeople (y).' In another place he tells us, 'it was be-vernment of lieved Cromwell died with grief and discontent, because Cromwell, he could not attain to the honest name of a king, and p. 96. the old formality of a crown, though he had before exceeded the power by a wicked usurpation.'-That care, anxiety, disappointment and vexation prey on the spirits, and waste the constitution, is known to all; that these were the lot of Cromwell, as they are of most of those who are placed on the pinnacle of glory, and attentive to their duty and their fame, may very eafily be conceived by fuch as have read the foregoing notes; that the government of Cremwell was greatly embarrassed by the madness of parties, the estrangement of friends, and the want of money to pay the armies which it was necessary to keep on foot: I fay that this was fo, is too evident to be denied. -But had

ha

In his death he displayed his wonted (BBBB) firmness and enthusiasm. His body was buried with more than regal magnificence (*) in Westminster-Abbey, from the life of the protector been prolonged, 'tis not impoffible he might have got the better of his difficulties; and maintained his post in spight of all opposition. For we are to remember it was Cromwell who had dared to feize the government; to raise money by his own authority; to create and dissolve parliaments; to combat with Kings, and to scatter terror through the nations. -By what means he would have done this, whether by (z) Thur- fecuring Fleetwood and Delbrowe, to whom he owed me loe, vol. vii. disappointment, in assuming the crown, and calling another parliament, must be left to the conjecture of the reader. The latter he certainly had thoughts of before his fickness (z).

(BBBB) In his death he displayed his wonted for mness and enthusiasm] 'When the symptoms of death, says 'Mr. Ludlow, were apparent upon him, and many mi-

- inisters and others affembled in a chamber at White-. hall, praying for him, whilft he manifested so little
- remorie of conscience for his betraying the publick cause, and facrificing it to the idol of his own ambi-
- ' tion, that some of his last words were rather becoming a mediator than a finner, recommending to
- God the condition of the nation that he had fo in-
- famously cheated, and expressing a great care of the
- e people whom he had fo manifestly despised. But he
- feemed, above all, concerned for the reproaches he
- faid men would cast upon his name, in trampling on
- his ashes when dead. In this temper of mind he de-(a) Vol. ii. parted this life (a). —I fancy Mr. Ludiow had in his eye p. 612. the following expressions which Cromwell is said to have made use of in his sickness, in a prayer addressed to the Su-

(*) The expences of his funeral are faid to have amounted to 60,000 l.

whence, after the restoration, it was removed, and treated with all possible indignity. His character has been very differently

Beauty preme Being. 'Lord, although I am a miserable and wretched creature, I am in covenant with thee, through grace, and I may, I will come to thee for thy people, thou hast made me (though very unworthy) a mean instrument to do them some good, and thee fervice; and many of them have fet too high a value upon mee, though others wish, and would be glad of my death; but Lord, however thou dost dispose of mee, continue and go on to do good for (b) Collecthem. Give them consistency of judgment, one-tion of seheart, and mutual love, and go on to deliver them, es concernand with the work of reformation, and make theing his late aname of Christ glorious in the world. Teach those, Highnesse, who look too much upon thy instruments, to depend of his fickmore upon thyself; pardon such as desire to trample ness, by one upon the dust of a poor worm, for they are thy peo-that was ple too (b).'—This was all in character.—Two bed-chamor three more of his expressions, when death was in hisber. 4to, view, will shew us in what temper he left the world. Lond. p. 1z. Lord, thou knowest, if I do desire to live, it is to () Id. p. 6. • shew forth thy praise, and declare thy works ()'---- See the quo-Again he faid, 'I would be willing to live to be fur tation from ther serviceable to God and his people, but my work note [F].
is done, yet God will be with his people.'—These fayings feem to evince the greatness of his mind; the main thing he had in view, to have been the publick good; and strongly confirm what is faid to have been the avowed opinion of the most excellent Tillotson, That at last Cromwell's enthusiasm got the better of his hypocrify.' The night before his death, and not before, lord Fauconberg fays, he declared his fon Richard his fucceffor, in presence of four or five of his (c) Thurlos, council (c). P. 375.

His

rently (cccc) represented by different perfons:

(cccc) His character has been very differently reprefented.] Mr. Thurlor, in a letter to H. Cromwell, the day after his father's decease, tells him, it 'is not to be faid, what affection the army and all people shew to his late highness; his name is already precious. Never was there any man foe prayed for as he was duringe. his fickness, folemne affemblies meetinge every day, to befeech the Lord for the continuance of his life; foe that he is gone to heaven, embalmed with the tears of his people, and upon the wings of the prayers of the faints. He lived desired, and dyed lamented, every body bemoaning themselves, and saying, a great man is fallen in I/rael (d).' Lord Fauconberg stiles him the greatest personage and instrument of happiness, not only our own but indeed any age else ever produced (e). I do believe, fays Mr. Maid-" flone, if his story were impartially transmitted, and the unprejudiced world well possess with it, she would add him to her nine worthies, and make up that ' number a Decemviri. He lived and died in comfort-' able communion with God, as judicious persons near him well observed. He was that Mordecai that fought (f) Id. vol. the welfare of his people (f). These are high eulogiums from his friends, and, doubtlefs, proceeded from the affection and gratitude of those who uttered Mr. Voltaire stiles Cromwell 'an usurper worthy vol. i. 12mo. ' to reign (g);' and tells us, 'he died in the midst of the projects he was forming to strengthen his own power, and increase the glory of his nation.'----And that he left behind him the reputation of a dextrous villain, an intrepid commander, a bloody usurper, (b) Id. p. 77. ' and a fovereign that knew the art of governing (b).' -Mazarine, who had abjectly courted Cromwell during life, and received the law in almost all things from him, after his death, is faid to have characterized him as 'a fortunate fool (i).' Lord Clarendon does him less (i) Vol. vi. injustice, I am perswaded, most readers will think, whea

(d) Thurlee, vol. vii. P. 373.

(e) Id. P. 375.

p. 70.

p. 653.

fons; though his memory was celebrated by

when he describes him 'as a brave wicked man.' I will add no more but the following description of this extraordinary man, drawn by a celebrated and illustrious pen. 'Europe, fays he, had granted the furname of Great to three sovereigns, who reigned almost at the fame time, namely, Cromwell, Lewis XIV. and Frederick-William. To Cromwell, for having facrificed every civil duty to the defire of reigning; for having profituted his talents, which, instead of being " useful to his country, were subservient only to his ambition; for having concealed his impostures under the mask of fanaticism; for having enslaved his country under a pretence of fighting for her liberties; for becoming the executioner of his King, whom he fa-crificed to his fury to Gremwell, a bold, cunning, and ambitious man, but unjust, violent, and void of virtue; a man, in fine, who had great qualities, but 'never a good one. Cromwell, therefore, did not de-ferve the furname of Great, which is due only to virtue; and it would be degrading Lewis XIV. and Frederick William, to compare them to such a ri-(k) Memoirs val (k). What degradation it might be to Frederick of Branden-William to compare him with the protector, I pretend burg, p. 153. not to fay: but, with all due submission, if Cromwell did not deserve the surname of Great, much less did Lewis XIV. What were the faults imputed to Cromwell? Diffimulation, hypocrify, bringing Charles to the block, and ingratitude towards the Long parliament. Let these crimes be weighed in the nicest balance, they must be light as air when opposed to those of Lewis, who was an adulterer, who was not ashamed to confess that he waged war meerly for his glory (difdaining fo much as even to avow any reasonable pretence for overrunning Holland, and subjecting its inhabitants to innumerable woes) and wasted the finest country with fire and sword. Two cities and twentyfive towns in flames at one time, were a spectacle suf-Κk ficient

by the finest pens (DDDD) of his age; and

Age of Lewis XIV. vol. i. p. 154.

(1) Voltaire's ficient to imprint the worst ideas of the immortal Lewis. and the godlike Turenne (1). Where, but among barbarians, was fuch a scene ever exhibited? -- Nor was this all-Lewis broke through all oaths and treaties, every thing facred. Nothing, in a word, was ever equal to his villany. Witness his wars in Flanders, his breach of the Partition Treaty, and, above all, his revocation of the edict of Nantz (at the instigation of priests) whereby thousands of his innocent subjects were ruined, his kingdom impoverished, and its manufactures carried abroad. Was there any thing in Cromwell's character to be compared with all this? -- Cromwell, with all his faults, had many real virtues. Not so Lewis: he was a bigot; he was priest-ridden; superstitious; with little perfonal valour, and much vanity; who, but for his love and encouragement of the fine arts, would have been ranked with the Neros, the Caligulas, the Domitians, the tyrants and destroyers of mankind. He did not deserve then the furname of Great, which is due only to virtue. The painting out such enemies. of liberty and mankind in the finest colours, by the finest pens, is the greatest reproach of letters, and most dangerous to the interests of common humanity; and what, I hope, will justify the warmth of these reflections. (DDDD) His memory was celebrated by the finest pens of his age. The verses of Mr. Waller, Drygen and Sprat, afterwards bishop of Rochester, are well known. Besides these, I have now before me a pamphlet, intitled, Musarum Cantabrigiensium Luctus & Gratuia-tio: Ille in Funere Oliveri Angliæ, Scotiæ & Hibernia Protectoris; Hæc de Ricardi successione felicissima ad eundem (m). In the first copy of verses, by pographum. Tuckney, master of St. John's college, England is introduced speaking in the following strains:

(m) Cantabrigiæ: apud Johannem Field, Almæ Academiæ Tv-1658.

1, 5

Ergò Jaces, Dux magne? Jaces, Pater alme? nec ultrà Permittis circum victricia tempora laurum Serhe left behind him a never-dying fame.

Serpere? Pacificos an dedignaris honores? At Populi miseresce tui, quibus ipse salutem Impertire foles, & qui tua sceptra colebant Obseguio affectuque pari. Sed Carmina nulla Non exorandas potuerunt flectere Parcas. Occidit Anglorum decus ingens, occidit, eheu! Gentis Presidium! Quis me jam vindicet armis? Quis poterit nimiùm dubiis fuccurrere rebus ? Sæpius illa Patrem, Patrem tristissima dixit, Effuditque istas non exaudita querelas.

Dr. Whichcot celebrates his mild government and peaceful end in these lines:

Sobrius ausculta veterum quid pagina narrat. Fata trahunt homines cruciatibus ingeniosos. Decumbunt tremuli non ficca morte Tyranni. Arte sua pereant semper (justissima Lex est) Artifices nequam, quos inclementia pulsat. At Pater hic Patrize non est tormenta minatus, Annosusque expirat, & alta in pace quiescit.

Horton, Minshul, Seaman, celebrate his character in the highest terms, as did Worthington, Dillingham, Arrowsmith, and others. Dr. Cudworth has an Hebrew poem in this collection. There was also published on this occasion, Beatis Manibus invictisimi Herois Oli-

' varii Magni, magnæ Britanniæ Protectoris Parentatio, (n) Mercu-Scripta ab Equite Polono, which I have not feen (n). rius Politi-

Thus was the fame of Cromwell founded abroad; cus, No. thus was he lamented on his decease. At the restoration, indeed, his ashes were trampled on (0), and his (0) See Apmemory was branded; but time, the great friend to pendix. truth, has, in some measure, cleared up his character, and done justice to his abilities; and, if he cannot be ranked amongst the best, he, undoubtedly, is to be placed amongst the greatest of princes.

iel wind him a nevericring from วี รอาจตอน สาวารีเย็นที่ ซล ซอกโกเลิ โ.ยเวล มี A. Engli mi rester tui, nat exich falutem. impertire fold St outstand to colorant! Obsersio declara pari. de Carpina sulla בלנה בנדת ארלתופים מנה בל בי בל הראב ... Occiding of the decus in tens, occidit, cheal Sentis P. of Frank Quis en iam vindicet armis? Cais cornt mimièm debiis tuccamete rebus 1 Samues his a rome. Progenited hat madition a dieting Ethicher et fi soon exactiff augreles.

Le s' de les colebreses his mild, portrantest and - a cellul end in ideal lines :

Subrius comunia reterpro qu'il pagina accreto tota income the siste cruciations incomodes. I. an mar anni non fice anerie Tyreni. the tell general lemper (july line lawell) . เรา - ระวา สำเภา เมนา เมนา เมนา เมนา เมนา At Pater I desgje neh eli win in a cris atus. I really be explicated alice to race quelle.

Liert r. Ill Int. Screen, celebrate his character - 1 - L. Dighelt roomer as did it britingion dulling to a in the second of the Dir Control has an Thirty prima a a chalian. There was als publiced on uis occ ver, - be tis Manitus inviduitmi igan's (in rani bis , ii, ii gnæ Brissosiæ Pracektoris P no o sio, kor na ser pt _ 10 _quite Person, which i have not fee _), w Pen i

In the the frae of Quartel founder this? : folder and the mented on his decenfer are the cofferns ion, ique., bis affres were transfed on (s), and his -41 J. O. C. 171, - 7 as the instance of the standard are meaning mich, sar, in haie meafort, dicarci un his er ratien, ed ann gun en it in a nollkies : ani, if he canne be whe' are not the belt, he we have delige to be the present of the course of

APPENDIX

OF

ORIGINAL PAPERS.

Copy of a manuscript paper, written, it is probable, about the end of the year 1647, now, with many other original and valuable papers relating to the civil-wars, in the possession of Hans Wintrop Mortimer, Esq; of Lincoln's-Inn; which papers belonged formerly to col. Saunders of Derby-shire, colonel of a regiment of horse, &c.

HE freedome wee were borne to is so justly due to every Englishman, that whoever shall remember the vehemency wherewith the people did thirst after a parliament before they had this; the zeale wherewith they contributed to the late warre for defence of this freedome; and the success wherewith it hath pleased God to blesse those endeavours; will soone be satisfied, that there is no better cause in the world to engage upon: and therefore, the cause wee undertake at present, for which wee carry our lives in our bands, beinge the very same, will certaynly need no apology for itself, the only thinge that may seeme strange in these our actings, being the irregular manner of prosecuting our undoubted rights.

Herein wee desire it may be considered, That all ordinary means, and some extraordinary, have been already attempted, and, after much patience, proved altogether fruitless:

That the parlament hath made noe other use of the many signal opportunities put into their hands, than to continue their sitting at Westminster, and dividing the public treasure amongst themselves:

Kk 3

That,

That the chiefe officers of the army, (though pretending to keepe up the forces under them for the people's good, and to fee the same accomplished in a short time) have yet made noe other use of their power, than to continue and enlarge their own commands:

That besides our being dissapointed of the fruit so long expected, and being made more flaves every day than other to committees, and fundry other arbitrary courses; even in the most legal proceedings wee find foe much corruption, tediousnesse, chargablenesse, and obscurity practifed and abetted by officers of all forts, that the law itself is become noe protection to us in our properties or liberties:

Wee find that barbarous course still maintained of imprisoning men for debt, thereby hindering them from the use of their lawful callings; though they have nothinge else wherewith to fatisfy their creditors, or to preserve themselves, and their families from starvinge:

Wee find that the restraininge men's persons att pleasure, without cause rendered, and during pleasure, was never more frequent:

Wee find that tythes, whose beginninge was superstitious, and is found by experience to oppress the poor husbandman, and to be vexatious to all manner of people, and prejudicial to the commonwealth; were never foe ri-

goroufly and cruelly exacted as at prefent:

Wee find taxes to be multiplied without number, or hopes of end, and excise soe cruelly exacted, that noe man knows what is, or what shall be his owne; and although many millions of moneys hath been levied and payed, both voluntarily and by compulsion, yet noe accompt is given how they have beene expended; but the public debts are dayly encreased instead of beinge satisfied, and such vast fums of money payed dayly out of the public treasurie for interest unto some with userers, as is almost incredible:

Wee find the trade of the nation (which the parlament promised at the first to advance) to be generally decayed, that without speedy remedy the nation cannot long sublist:

Wee find the poore to be wholly difreguarded and oppressed, and thousands of families suffered to beg their bread, and many to perish with hunger:

But herein our condition hath beene rendered most desperate, that wee have not beene suffered to represent our fniseries to the parlament, and petition for redress; but persons have beene imprisoned for petitioning, and orders issued out from parlament to suppress petitions: Considering therefore this deplorable estate of the commonwealth, and the apparent danger of being imbroyled againe each in others blood, unless a speedy settlement prevent it; and confidering not only, that wee have attempted all regular wayes to procure reliefe for our longe oppressed country, but also that wee cannot with safety any longer offer our grievances and defires to parlament in petitions; and likewife confideringe that our flavery under arbitrary power is occasioned by the want of a settlement of a just and equal government, which if it were established would speedily ease us of all our common burthens; wee cannot bethinke ourselves of a more probable temedy, than to put ourselves, and invite our countrymen to joine with us, in a posture of defence, whereby wee may be fecure from danger, and from being prevented of our good intentions by the opposition of fuch as have defigned our flavery, while wee propound to all our dear countrymen (who are fure to bee concerned in fufferinge as much as if they were in office) some certaine grounds of common right and freedome, wherein they and wee might fee reason to agree amongst ourselves, and thereupon to establish a firme and present peace.

The particulars wee offer are as followeth.

1. That a period of time be set, wherein this present

parlament shall certainly end.

2. That the people be equally proportioned for the choice of the deputies in all future parlaments; and that they doe of course meete upon a certaine day (once at least in two years) for that end.

3. That a contract be drawne and fealed betweene the people and their feveral deputies respectively, upon the day of the elections, wherein the bounds, limits, and extent of their trust shall be clearly expressed. As that they bee impowered with sufficient authoritie for executinge, alteringe and repealinge of lawes; for erectinge and abolishinge, judicatories; for appointinge, removing and callinge to account magistrates, and officers of all degrees; for makeinge warre and peace, and treating with sovereigne states. And that their power do not extend to the bindinge of any K k 4

man in matters of religion, or in the way of God's worfhip; nor to compell the person of any innocent man to ferve against his will either by sea or land; nor to the makinge of any law, that shall be either evidently pernicious to the people, or not equally obligatory unto all perfons without exception.

4. That for the security of all parties, who have acted on any side in the late public differences since the year 1640, and for preventinge all contentions amongst them; the people may agree amongst themselves, that no suture parlaments shall question or molest any person for any thinge sayed or done in reference to these public differences.

rences.

5. That the great officers of the nation, as well civil as military, be often removed, and others put into their room, either every yeare, or every fecond yeare at fartheft; to the end the persons employed may discharge themselves with greater care, when they know themselves lyable to a speedy account, and that other men may be encouraged to deserve preferment when they see the present incumbents not affixed to their offices as to freeholds.

6. That all determinating committees (except such as are necessary to be kept up for the managing of forces by sea and land) the chancery, and all other arbitrary courts, be forthwith dissolved; or at least all power taken from them, which they have hitherto exercised over men's persons or estates: and henceforward, as well ordinances as acts of parlament be executed in the antient way of tryals

by juries.

7. That the huge volumes of statute laws and ordinances, with the penalties therein imposed, as well corporal as pecuniary, be well revised; and such only left in force, as shall be found fit for the commonwealth; especially that men's lives be more precious than formerly, and that lesser punishment than death, and more useful to the public, be found out for smaller offences: that all lawes, writs, commissions, pleadinges and records be in the English tongue; and that proceedinges be reduced to a more certaine charge, and a more expeditious way than formerly: That no fees at all be exacted of the people in courts of justice; but that the public ministers of state be wholly maintained out of the public treasury.

8. That

8. That estates of all kinds, real and personal, be made lyable to debts; but noe imprisonment at all by way of punishment, nor in order to makinge satisfaction, which possibly can never be made, but only by way of security in order to a tryal for some criminal sact, to be determined within some short and certaine space of time; and that this power of restraining mens persons be very cautiously allowed, to which end the benefit of Habeas Corpus to be in noe case denied by those whom it concerns to grant them.

9. That tythes be wholly taken away, the parishoners from whom they are due paying in lieu thereof to the state where they are not appropriate, and to the owners where they are, moderate and certaine rent-charge out of their lands: the ministers to be maintained, either by the voluntary contribution of such as desire to hear them, or else by some settled pensions out of the public treasury.

to. That as speedy and as persect an account as may be, be given and published for the satisfaction of the people how those vast sums of money have been disposed of, that have been disbursed, voluntarily and otherwise, since the beginning of these troubles.

11. That foe foone as public occasions will possibly permit, the imposition of excise, and all other taxes upon the people be wholly taken away, and that in the mean time all care and diligence be used in taking away those occasions, and in the husbandly managing of the public revenues; and to that end that a ballance be made and declared of all public revenues and expences, and that a course be taken for paying all public debts and damages; so far as may be, and that the debts upon interest be discharged by sale of such lands and goods as are eyther properly belonginge or any wayes accrued to the state, and that they be sold to the best advantage.

12. I hat there be no less care taken for the growing wealth of the nation, consisting originally in trade, which being our strength and glory, ought by mitigating the customs, and by all other good meanes, to be cherished & promoted.

13. That (though restoring peace and commerce be the surest way of providinge for the poor) yet some more effectual course may be sound out than hitherto hath beene for the settinge those to worke who are able, for bringinge up of children to profitable employments, and for relievinge such as are past their labor, especially such as became so in the service of their country duringe the late warre.

14. That the affairs of Ireland be taken into a more ferious confideration than heretofore, and that a peace-able way for reducing that nation may be once endeavoured; and in case that succeed not, the war to be prosecuted with vigour and unanimity, as by God's blessinge wee may promise to ourselves a speedy end of those troubles, a timely reliefe to many famishing families there, and better intend the affairs of England.

Now considering that the settlement of the nations peace and freedome, hath beene constantly declared by the parlament to be their only end in engaginge in this last warre; and confidering the many promifes folemn vowes and oathes made by them to the people, to confirme them in the belief of their fincere intentions therein, wee should hope to find no opposition from them in our desires. But however wee cannot but be confident, that the fouldiery of the army (who folemnly engaged at Newmarket in June last [June 5, 1647] to procure the same things in effect for the people, which are here propounded,) will fo remember that folemn engagement as to shew their ready concurrence with us; and wee hope it will be clear to them, that there is noe other possible way to provide that fufficient indemnity (the want whereof first occasioned their refusal to disband) than what is here propounded; neither that there is any probable way to fecure the arrears of the supernumeraries, (who are disbanded contrary to the folemn engagement) or of those continuing in armes. And at least wee cannot but promise ourselves the assistance of all the commons, who are not blinded by fome felf-interest, or engaged to continue the present confuming distractions by virtue of some affet or employment dependinge thereon.

But however wee intending wrong to noe man, nor any private advantage to ourselves, and the cause for which we appear beinge soe clearly just, wee repose our confictive in the most high God, to protect us from the malice and rage, both of all selfseekinge ambitious men, who affect lordlinesse and tranny, and have designed the people's

ple's flavery, and a perpetuation of their own rule, and of all such mercenary vassals as they shall hire to destroy us, and keepe the yoke of slavery upon the people's necks. And wee doe hereby promise and engage to all our countrymen, that whensoever the settlement of the peace and freedome herein propounded shall be effected (all delayes wherein wee shall to our utmost possibilities prevent) wee shall gladly and chearfully return to our private habitations, and callings, enjoying only our equal share of freedome with all others in the nation.

Copy of a letter from O. Cromwell to (then) major Saunders of Derbyshire, dated June 17, 1648; superscribed In the hand of Hans writing as followeth, 'The L. generalls order for takeing Mortinger, Sir Trevor Williams, and Mr. Morgan, sheriffe of this

" Monmouthshire,"

SIR,

I Send you this enclosed by it felse, because it's of greater moment. The other you may communicate to Mr. Rumsey as far as you thinke fitt, and I have written. I would not have him or other honest men bee discouraged that I thinke itt not fitt at present to enter into contests, itt will be good to yeeild a little for publicke advantage, and truly that is my end, wherein I desire you to satisfie them.

I have fent as my letter mentions, to have you remove out of Brecknokshire, indeed into that part of Glamorgan-sheire web lyeth next Munmouthsheire, for this end.

Wee have plaine discoveries that Sir Trevor Williams of Langevie about two miles from Uske in the countye of Munmouth was very deepe in the plott of betrayinge Chepstowe castle, soe that wee are out of doubt of his guiltynesse thereof.

I doe hereby authorize you to feize him, as also the high sheriffe of Munmouth Mr. Morgan, whoe was in the fame plott.

But because Sir Trevor Williams is the more dangerous man by farr, I would have you to seize him first, and the other will easily bee had. To the end you may not be frustrated, and that you bee not deceaved. I thinke fitt to give you some caracters of the man, and some intimations how things stand. Hee is a man (as I am informed) full of craft and subtiltye, very bould and resolute, hath a house at Langevie well stored with armes, and very stronge, his neighbours about him very malignant and much for him, whoe are apt to rescue him if apprehended, much more to discover any thinge weh may prevent itt. Hee is full of lealofie, partly out of guilt, but much more because hee doubts some that were in the businesse have discovered him, which indeed they have, and alsoe because hee knows that his servant is brought hither, and a minister to bee examined here, whoe are able to discover the whole plott. Iff you should march directly into that countye and neere him, itts ods hee either fortefyes his house, or gives you the slip, soe alsoe if you should goe to his house and not finde him there, or if you attempt to take him and misse to effect itt, or if you make any knowen enquirve after him, itt wil be discovered.

net

Wherefore to the first you have a faire pretence of goeinge out of Brecknock sheire to quarter about Newport and Carleon, which is not above 4 or 5 miles from his house. You may send to col. Herbert, whose house lyeth in Munmouthsheire, whoe will certenly acquaint you where hee is. You are alsoe to fend to capt Nicolas, whoe is at Chepflowe, to require him to affift you if hee should gett into his house, and stand upon his guard. Sam. Jones, whoe is quarterm' to col. Herbert's troupe, wil be very affiflinge to you if you fend to him to meete you att your quarters; both by lettinge you know where hee is, and alsoe in all matters of intelligence. If theire shal be neede capt. Burge his troupe now quarteringe in Glamorgansheire shal be directed to receave orders from you. You perceave by all this, that wee are (it may bee) a little too much follicitous in this bufineffe, it's our fault, and indeed fuch a temper causeth us often to overact businesse, wherefore without more adoe wee leave itt to you, and you to the guidance of God herein, and rest

June 17, 1648.

Yours O. CROMWELL.

If you seize him bring & lett him bee brought with a stronge guard to mee. If capt. Nicolas should light on him at Chepstowe, doe you strengthen him with a good guard to bring him.

If you feize his person, disarme his house, but lett not his armes bee imbeziled.

If you need capt. Burge his troupe, it quarters betweene Newport and Cardiffe.

Gremwell went into Wales the beginning of May, 1648; Chepflow castle was surprized for the King about the same time, but retaken the 25th. It does not appear whether Sir Trevor Williams was secured, or not.

> The fix following letters are in the possession of Theodosius Forrest, Efq; of George-street, Yorke-Buildings, London.

Deerest Robin,

ו בני של וו היה וו מוכמב לפינו " Nowe (bleffed bee God) I can write, and thou receave, freely. I never in my life sawe more deepe sense, and lesse will to shewe itt unchristianly, then in that, wen thou diddest write to us when wee were at Windsor, and thou in the middest of thy tentation, weh indeed (by what wee understood of itt) was a great one, and occasioned the greater, by the letter the generall sent thee, of web thou wast not mistaken, when thou didest challengemee to bee the pener. How good has God beene to difpose all to mercy, and although itt was trouble for the prefent, yett glory is come out of itt, for web wee prayse the Lord with thee, and for thee, and truly thy carriage has biene such, as occasions much honor to the name of God, and too religion, Goe onn in the strength of the Lord, and the Lord bee still with thee. But (deere Robin) this businesse hath beene (I trust) a mightye providence to this poore kingdome, and too us all. The house of comons is very sensible of the Kg dealinges, and of our brethrens, in this late transaction, You should doe well (if: you have any thing that may discover iuglinge) to search itt out and lett us knowe itt, itt may bee of admirable use at this tyme, because wee shall (I hope) instantly goe upon businesses in relation to them, tendinge to prevent danger. The house of comons has this day voted as follows. First

APPENDIX

510

Tis believed bim is the word, though there is fome doubt that they will make noe more addresses to the K. 2. None shall applye to him wthout leave of the two houses upon paine of beinge guilty of high treason. 3dly. They will receave nothinge from the Kinge, nor shall any other bringe any thinge to them from * him, nor receave any thinge from the Kinge. Lastly the members of both houfes, whoe were of the committee of both kingdoms, are established in all that power in themselves for England, and Ireland, we's they had to act with both kingdoms, and Sr. Fohn Evelin of Wilts is added in the roome of Mr. Recorder, and Rath. F. Fienis in the roome of Sir Phillip Stapleton, and my Lord of Kent, in the roome of the Earl of Effex. I thinke it good you take notice of this, the fooner the better.

Lett us knowe how its with you in point of strength, and what you neede from us, some of us thinke the Kinge well with you, and that itt concernes us to keepe that island in great securitye, because of the French, et. And if soe, where can the Kinge bee better. If you have more force you will fuer of full provision for them. The

Lord bleffe thee, pray for int must be a single

Thy deere friend and fervant

My La Whorton's Jan. 3d: adi to the 19 11 neere tenn at night, 1647. .. - 1 1 2 1

For Col. Robert Hamond Governor of the isle of Wight theise

ים ונוח חיים אינה וויים ווייכ הב For the service of the kingdom hast post hast. The post with

of the children Oliver Cromwell.

SIR, WEE have received you letter of the 28th inflant, wherein you defire to have the approbation of this committee concerning the fower gentlemen by you appointed to watch in their courses at the Kinges chamber dore, Wee thinke it fitt that in this bufineffe you should make your application to the houses, from whom wee doubt not you will receive orders in that particular! For the money appointed for the fortification of the caffle it was to be furnished by the committee of the army by the

appointm^t of this committe w^{ch} accordingly they prefently did. & defired them to fend thither with all speed, and of this, informacon hath beene given to the gentleman you mention, who follicits yor businesse weh is all that can be done at this committee for it. 2. 313 . 1 < 5 4

Derby House 1647.

Signed in the name & by the war-31°. January rant of the committee at Derby House by your affectionate friend

To Colonel Robert Hammond Governour of the isle of Wight These are W. SAY & SEALE.

Sr.

VOU fee by these inclosed votes how great a burthen the parliamt hath laid uppon mee. I doe hereby fend to you, That you would instantlie send mee a list of such as are att present about the Kinge who are psons fitt to be confided in, if you have any in the island worthy of that trust, I would desire you to send their names also in the same list: and if you cannot fill upp the number of thirtie with you, which I should be glad you could, then I desire you to fend mee the qualitie of those that will be wanting, that foe they may be supplyed from hence: It will be necessarie, That you hasten this businesse seeing the parliam expects a speedy & effectuall observance of their command herein. I propose soe soone as I have received yor lift to make the number uppe, and lay it before the parliamt to receive their approbation and allowance for my indempnitie; you fee by the votes, That the number of thirtie (of all fortes) gentlemen and their fervants, cookes, butlers, etc. may not bee exceeded, and therefore itt will bee fitt, That a respect bee had to all occasions and necessities of the household; wishing you all successe in yor great trust and charge:

I rest: You assured friend

Queenftreete. 50. Februarij 1647.

T. FAIRFAX.

For Colonell Robert Hamond Governor of the isle of Wight.

viced and the first of the first in the firs

WEE have received informacon that there are now fome defines in agitation concerning the Kings escape, who is to be carried into France; and that there are two of those yt now atend the King upon whom they rely for escaling this escape. Who they are we cannot discover, nor yet what grounds they have to expect their service in it. Yet wee thought fitt to give you this advertisement that you might the more carefully watch against it.

Darbie House 13°. Martij 1647. Signed in the name & by ye warrant of the comttee at Derby House by yor very loveing ffriend radiand a range in or independent.

Note, all those parts that are in Italic, are in cypher in the original, and were decyphered by Col. Hammend.

. if round national and include the child

Sweete Robin, 1 19 11 1 19 C. 1915 1.

OUR relation is so nigh upon the best accompt, that nothing can concerne you or us, but wee believe they are of a mutual concernmt. And therefore wee hold ourfelves much obliged to transmitt you this inclosed (coming from a fure hand to us) not onely as relating to yours or particular, but likewise as a matter of vast importance to the publick.

Itt hath pleafed God (and wee are perswaded in much mercy) even miraculously to dispose the hearts of yor freinds in the army, as one man (together with the concurrence of the godly from all parts) to interpose in this treatie, yet in such wise both for matter & manner, as, we believe, will not onely refresh the bowells of the faints, and all other faithful people of this kingdome, But bee of satisfaction to every honest member of parliant when tendred to them and made publick weh wil bee within a very sew daies; and considering of what a consequence the escape of the King from you (in the interim) maie proove, Wee hast this dispatch to yow together with or most earnest request, That (as yow tender the interest of this nation, of God's people, or of aine morall men: or as you tender the ending of England's troubles, or defire the justice & righteousness maie take place) you would see to the fecuring of that person from escape, whether by retorning of him to the castle, or such other waie as in thy wisdom and honesty shall seeme meetest. Wee are confident you will receive in few daies a duplicate of this defire, & an affurance from the generall & army to stand by you in itt: and in the meane time for or parts (though itt maie not be very confiderable to yow) wee doe hereby ingage to owne yow with or lives & fortunes therein, weh wee should not foe forwardly expresse, but that wee are impelled to the premises in dutie & conscience to God and man. The Lord (yors & or God) bee your widome and in all things, however wee have done or duty & witnessed the affections of Deare Hamond

ion,

Yor most intire; & faithfull Windsor, 14th ober brethren, friends, & servants. 1648.

H. IRETON. T. HARRISON. JOHN DISBROWE. *E. GROSVENER.

SIR

Since our last wee have received againe advertiseme from a good hand that the defigne holdes for the King's efcape; and to escape all suspicion from you, he intends to

to the eighteenth article of the old decayed inftrument of government, which allows none that is not worth 200 l. to choose parliament men.'

^{*} Grosvener I believe to be the name, though there is some doubt. What renders it more probable is, that there was a colonel Edward Grosvenor, quarter master of the army, chosen member of parliament for Westminster, in 1656, and again in Richard's parliament, January 27, 1658, O.S. See Wood's Fasti, vol. ii. c. 79. and Mercurius Politicus, No. 550. p. 176.

In ' A narrative of the late parliament (so called) begun at Westminster September 17, 16;6, &c. with an account of the places of profit, fal-' leries and advantages which they hold and receive under the prefent power, &c. appears, 'Collonel Grosvenor, as quarter-master general, 419 l. 10 s. od. per annum, and it's faid hath captain of horse pay; and the better to car-, ry it in the choice at Westminster, the soldiers were bid pull off their red coats and put on others, and to give their votes for him, which is contrary walke out on foote a mile or two, as usually in the day time, & there horses are layd in the isle to carry him to a boate. If he cannot do this, then either over the house in the night, or at some privat window in the night he intends his passage; which were thought fitt agains to give you notice of, that you may make such use of it for prevention, as you shall see cause.

Darby House 18 Novemb. 1648. Signed in the name & by the warrant of the committee of lords & commons at Darby House, by

Your very affectionate friend

P. S. Wee defire you to communicate this to the commission¹³ there; and also if you shall finde the Kinge hath escaped to give us notice with all possible speed.

SALISBURY.

For Collonel Robert Hammond Governor of the isle of Wight.

> The three following letters are in the poffifion of Robert Symmer, E/q; of Mount Street, Grosvenor Square.

Deere Norton,

Have sent my sonn over to thee, beinge willinge to answere providence, and although I confesse I have had an offer of a very great proposition from a father of his daughter, yett truly I rather encline to this in my thoughts, because though the other bee very farr greater, yett I see different tyes, and not that assurance of godlynesse, yett indeed sairness. I confesse that which is tould mee concerning estate of Mr. M. is more then I can looke for as thinges now stand.

If God please to bring itt about, the consideration of pietye in the parents, and such hopes of the gentlewoeman in that respect, make the businesse to mee a great mercy, concerninge weh I desier to waite upon God.

I am confident of thy love, and defier thinges may be car-

carried with privacie. The Lord doe his will, thats best, to web submittinge I rest your humble servant,

Feb. 25, 1647.

O. CROMWELL.

For my noble friend Col. Richard

Deere Dick,

ITT had beene a favour indeed to have mett you he're at Farnham, but I heere you are a man of great bufinesse.—Therefore I say noe more, if it be a savor to the house of commons to enioy you, what is it to mee? But in good earnest when wi... you and your brother Russel be a lit... honest and attend your charge surely so. [some] expect itt, especially the good sellowes wh...

chose you.

I have mett wth Mr Maior, wee spent two or 3 howers together last night. I perceave the gentleman is very wise and honest, and indeed much to be vallewed, some thinges of comon same did a little slicke, I glad ... heard his doubts, and gave such answare as was next att hand, I believe to some satisfaction, never the lesse I exceedingly liked the gentlemans plainnesse, and free dealinge wth mee. I knowe God has beene above all ill reports, and will in his owne tyme vindicate mee, I have noe cause to cumplaine. I see nothinge but that this particular businesse betweene him and mee may go onn, The Lords will be donn. For newes out of the north there is little, only the Mal. partye is prevailinge in the par last of S. They are earnest for a warr, the ministers oppose, as yett.

Mr. Marshall is returned, whoe sayis soe. And soe doe many of our letters, their great committee of dangers have 2 malig. for one right. Its sayd they have voted an armic of 40000 in parint soe some of yesterdayes letters, but I account my newes ill bestowed, because upon an idle per-lon.

I shall take speedy course in the business concerninge my tenants, for web thankes, my service to your lady, I am really Your affectionate servant

March 28, 1648.

O. CROMWELL.

Farnham.

For my noble friend Col. Richard Norton, theise.
Ll 2

Decre

. Deere Norton,

Could not in my last give you a perfect account of what passed betweene mee and Mr. M. because wee were to have a conclusion of our speed that morninge after I wrote my letter to you, which wee had, and havinge had a full enterview of one anothers mindes, wee parted with this, that both would consider with our relations, and accordinge to satisfactions given there, acquaint each other with our mindes.

I cannot tell how better to doe itt, to receave or give fatisfaction then by you, whoe (as I remember) in your last, fayd that if thinges did stick betweene us, you would use your endeavor towards a close.

The thinges infifted upon were theife, (as I take itt) Mr. Maier defired 400 p. annum of inheritance lyinge in Cambridge sheire, and Norfolke, to bee præsently settled, and to be for maintenance, wherein I desired to bee advised by my wife.

I offered the land in Hampshire, for present maintenance, we's I dare say with copses and ordinarie fells will be communibus annis 500!1 p. connum, besides 500!1 per annum, in tennants handes houldinge but for one life, and about 300!1 p. ann. some for two lives, some for three lives. But as to this if the latter bee not liked off I shall bee willing a farther conference bee had in the sirst.

In point of jouncture I shall give satisfaction. And as to the settlement of landes given mee by the parint satisfaction to be given in like manner, accordinge as wee dis-courfed.

In what else was demanded of mee I am willing (for farr as I remember any demand was) to give satisfaction.

Only I havinge beene enformed by Mr. Robin fon that Mr. Maior did upon a former match offer to fettle the mannor wherein hee lived, and to give 2000! in monie, I did infift upon that, and doe defire itt may not bee with difficultye, the monie I shall neede for my two little wenches; and therby I shall free my sonn from beinge charged with them. Mr. Maior parts with nothing in præsent but that monie, savinge their board, weh I shoulde not bee unwillinge to give them to enioy the comfort of their societye,

w c)

weh itts reason hee smarte for, if hee will robb mee altogether of them. Truly the land to bee settled both what the par^{Int} gives mee, and my owne, is very little lesse then 3000^{II} per annum all thinges considered, if I bee rightly informed. And a lawyer of Lincoln's Inn haveinge searched all the marques of Worcester's writinges, weh were taken at Rogland and sent for by the par^{Intt} and this gentleman appointed by the committee to search the sayd writinges, assures mee, there is noe scruple concerninge the title, and itt soe sell out that this gentleman whoe searched was my owne lawyer, a very godly able man, and my deere friend, weh I reckon noe smale mercy, hee is also possess of the writinges for mee.

I thought fitt to give you this account, desiringe you to make such use of itt as God shall direct you, and I doubt not but you will doe the part of a friend betweene two friendes, I account myselfe one, and I have heard you say Mr. Maior was entirely soe to you. What the good pleafure of God is I shall waite, there is only rest, præsent my fervice to your lady, to Mr. Maior, et.

I rest

April the 3d 1648.

Your affectionate servant,

O. CROMWELL.

I desier you to carrie this business with all privacie, I beseech you to doe so as you love mee, lett me entreat you not to loose a day herein, that I may knowe Mr. Maior's minde for I thinke I may be att leizure for a weeke to attende this businesse to give and take satisfaction, from weh perhaps I may bee thutt up afterwards by imployment. I know thou art an idle sellowe, but prethee neglect mee not now, delay may bee very inconvenient to mee, I much rely upon you. Lett me here from you in two or 3 days. I confesse the principall consideration as to mee is the absolute settlement of the mannor where he lives, weh he would doe but conditionally in case he prove to have noe sonn, and but 3001 in case he have a sonn. But as to this I hope farther reason may work him to more.

N. B. In a sheet list of the names of the members e yet living of both houses of parliament forceably secluded by the army in 1648, &c.' appears Southampton, col. Richard Norton, Esq; Knight, &c. He was chosen Knight Parliamenof the Shire for Southampton, in the room of Sir Henry tary History, Wallop, Knt. who deceased in 1644, in virtue of writs iffued Off. 24, and Nov. 10, 1645. 40.

In another list intitled 'A more exact and necessary catalogue of pensioners in the long parliament than is extant, appears Richard Norton, colonel, governor of Southampton. And in a third intitled 'A perfect lift of the lords of the other bouse, and of the knights, citizens and bur-

e geffes, and barons of the Cinque Ports, now affembled in this present parliament holden at Westminster, for the commonwealth of England, Scotland and Ireland, Jan. 27, 1658, appears county of Southampton, Richard Norton of Southwicke, Efqr.

Sir Gregory Norton, one of Charles I. judges, was of Suffex or Kent, and, as I apprehend, of a different family from the colonel.

> The following seventeen letters were transcribed from the originals which were found at Pusey, the feat of the Dunches, in Berkshire *, by the hon. Horace Walpole, E/q;

For my very lovinge Friend Mr. Robinson, Preacher at Southampton. Theise.

Sr.

Thanke you for your kinde letter, as to the businesse you mention I desire to use this playennesse with you. When the last overture was betweene mee and Mr. Major, by the mediation of coll. Norton, after the meetinge I had with Mr. Major att Farnham, I defired the coll. (findinge as I thought some scruples and hesitation in Mr.

Major)

John Dunch of Pusey, in Berks, son of Sam. Dunch of North Baddifley in Hampshire, Esq; married Anne, Daughter and coheires of Richard Major, of Hursley, Esq; - Wood's Fasti, vol. ii. c. 120.

Major) to knowe of him whether his minde was free to the thinge or not. Coll. Norton gave me this account, that Mr. Major, by reason of some matters as they then stood, was not very free thereunto, whereupon I did acquiesce submittinge to the providence of God. Upon your revivinge of the businesse to mee, & your letter, I thinke fit to returne you this answare, & to say in plainnesse of spirit to you, That upon your testimonie of the gentlewoeman's worth & the common report of the pyetye of the samilye I shall be willinge to entertayne the renewinge of the motion upon such considerations as may bee to mutuall satisfaction, only I thinke that a speedye resolution will be very convenient to both partes. The Lord direct all to his glory. I desier your prayers therein, and rest

Your very affectionate friend,

Feb. 1st 1648.

O. CROMWELL.

For my very worthye Friend Richard Major, Esq; Theise.

Receaved some intimations formerly & by the last returne from Southampton a letter from Mr. Robinson concernynge the reviveinge the last yeare's motion touchinge my sonne & your daughter. Mr. Robinson was also pleased to send inclosed in his a letter from you to him, bearing date the 5th of this instant February, wherin I sinde your willingenesse to entertaine any good meanes for the compleatinge of that businesse. From whence I take encoragment to send my sonn to wayte upon you & by him to lett you knowe that my desires are (if providence soe dispose) very sull & free to the thinge, if upon an enterview theire prove alsoe a freedom in the younge persons thereunto. What liberty you will give heerein I wholly submit to you. I thought fitt in my letter to Mr. Robinson to mention somewhat of expedition, because indeed I knowe not how soone I may be called into the seild, or other occasions may remove mee from hence, havinge for L 1 4

APPENDIX.

the present some liberty of stay in London. The Lord direct all to his glorye. I rest

Sr

Fib. 12th 1648. Yr very humble fervant,

O. CROMWELL.

For my very worthye Friend Richard Major, Efq; Theife.

Sr

520

Receaved yours by Mr. Statleton together with an account of the kinde reception & the many civilityes afforded them, especilly to my sonn in the libertye given him to waite upon your worthye daughter, the report of whose vertue and godlynesse has soe great a place in my hart that I thinke fitt not to neglect any thinge on my part which may conduce to confummate a close of the businesse, if God please to dispose the younge ones harts thereunto & other suiteable orderinge affaires towards mutuall fatisfaction appeare in the dispensation of providence, for which purpose and to the end matters may be brought to as neere an issue as they are capable off (not beinge at libertye by reason of publicke occasions to waite upon you, nor, as I understand your health permittinge) I thought fitt to fend this gentleman Mr. Stapleton instructed with my minde to fee how neere wee may come to an understandinge one of another therein, & although I could have wished the consideration of thinges had beene betweene us two itt beinge of so neere concernmente, yet providence for the present not allowinge, I desier you to give him credence on my behalfe. Sr all thinges which yourselse & I had in conference att Fainham doe not occurr to my memorie thorough multiplicitye of businesse interveninge, I hope I shall with a very free hart testifie my readynesse to that which may bee expected from mee. I have noe more at present but desiringe the Lord to order this affair to his glory & the comfort of his fervants.

Feb. 26, 1648.

Your humble fervant

O. CROMWELL.

(No Direction.) (In another hand but figned by himself.)

Sr.

Y Ours I have recieved, & have given further instructions to this bearer Mr. Stapylton to treate with you about the businesse in agitation betweene your daughter and my sonne. I am ingag'd to you for all your civility's, & respects already manifested. I trust there will bee a right understanding betweene us and a good conclusion: and though I cannot particularly remember the thinges spoken off at Farnham, to which your letter seemes to referre mee; yet I doubt not but I have sent the offer of such thinges now, which will give mutuall satisfaction to us both. My attendance upon publique affairs will not give mee leave to come downe unto you myselfe; I have sent unto you this gentleman with my mind. I salute Mrs Major, though unknowne, with the rest of your samily. I commit you, with the progresse of the businesse to the Lord; and rest

March the 8th Your affured friend to serve you 1648.

O. CROMWELL.

(No Direction, but wrote on the Back, L. G. Cromwell's Letter of Exceptions-)

Sr.

I Receaved your paper by the handes of Mr Stapilton. I defier your leave to returne my diffatisfaction therewith. I shall not neede to premise how much I have defired (I hope upon the best groundes) to match with you, the same desier still continuees in me, if providence see itt sitt. But I may not be soe much wantinge to myselfe nor familye as not to have some equallitive of consideration towards itt. I have two younge daughters to bestowe if God give them life, & oportunitye. Accordinge to your offer I have nothinge for them, nothing at all in hand, if my sonne dye, what consideration is there to mee? And yet a jouncture parted, with, if shee dye there is little, if you have an heire male then but 3000 f. without tyme affertained. But for theile thinges I doubt not but one enterview betweene you & my selfe they might bee accommodated to mutual fatisfaction, and in relation to theise I thinke wee should hardly part, or have many wordes, soe much doe I desier a cloasure with you. But to deale freely with you, the fettlinge of the mannor of Hursley as you propose itt stickes soe much with mee that either I understand you not, or else it much fayles my expectation. you offer itt there is 400 f. pr. annum charged upon itt. For the 150 f. to your lady for her life as a jouncture I stick not att that, but the 250 f. pr. annum untill Mr. Ludlowe's lease expiers the teanure whereof I knowe not, & foe much of the 250 f. pr. annum as exceeds that leafe in anual valew for some tyme alsoe after the expiration of the fd leafe, gives such a maime to the mannor of Hursley as indeed renders the rest of the manor very inconsiderable. Sr. if I concurr to denye myselfe in point of present monies as alsoe in the other thinges mentioned as aforefaid, I may and I doe expect the mannor of Hurfley to bee fettled without any charge upon itt after your decease savinge your ladyes jouncture of 150 f. per annum, which if you should thinke fitt to encrease I should not stand upon itt: your own estate is best known to you, but suerlye your personall estate beinge free for you to dispose, will with some smale matter of addition begitt a neerenesse of equallitye, if I heere well from others, & if the difference in that were not very confiderable I should not infift upon itt. What you demand of me is very high in all pointes, I am willinge to fettle as you desier in every thinge favinge for present maintenance 400 f. p. annum, 300 f. p. annum I would have somewhat free to be thanked by them for, The 300 f. p. annum of my ould land for a jouncture after my wives decease. I shall settle, and in the meane tyme out of other landes att your election, & trulye Sr. if that bee not good nor will any landes I doubt, I doe not much diffrust your principles in other thinges have acted you towards confidence. You demand in case my fonn have none issue male but only daughters, then the lands in Hantsheire, Monmouth and Gloucestersheire to defcend to the daughters, or 3000 f. a peice; the first would most unequall, the latter is too high, they will be well provided provided for by beinge inheritrixes to their mother, & I am willinge to 2000 £, a peice to bee charged upon those landes.

Sr. I cannot but with very many thankes acknowledge your good opinion of mee & of my fonn, as alfoe your great civilities towards him & your daughter's good respects (whose goodnesse though known to mee only at fuch a distance by the report of others) I much valew, & indeed that causeth mee soe cheerfully to denye myselfe as I doe in the point of monies, & foe willingly to complye in other thinges, but if I should not insist as before, I should in a greater measure denve both my owne reason & the advise of my freindes then were meete which I may not doe. Indeed Sr. I have not cloafed with a farr greater offer of estate, but rather chose to fix heere, I hope I. have not beene wantinge to providence in this, I have made myselse plaine to you, desiring you will make my sonn the messinger of your pleasure & resolution herein as speedilye as with conveniency you may. I take leave & rest

Your affectionate servant

I desier my service may be prefented to your lady & daughters.

O. CROMWELL.

March 14, 1648.

For my worthy Friend Richard Major, Efq; at Hursley.

Sr.

YOU will pardon the brevitye of theise lines, the haste I am in by reason of businesses occasions it. To testifye the earnest desier I have to see a happy period to this treatye betweene us, I give you to understand that I agree to 150 f. pr. annum out of the 300 f. pr. annum of my ould land, for your daughters jouncture over the 150 f. where you please.

400 f. p. annum, for present maintenance where you shall choose either in Hantsbire, Gloucester or Monmouth-Sheire.

Those lands settled upon my son & his heires males by your daughter, & in case of daughters only 2000 £. a peice charged upon those landes.

400 £.

APPENDIX.

400 f. p. annum free to raise portions for my two daughters. I expect the mannor of Hursley to be settled upon your eldest daughter & her heires, the heires of her body.

Your lady a jouncture of 150 f. p. annum out of itt.

For compensation to your younger daughter I agree to leave itt in your power after your decease to charge it with as much as will buye inn the lease of the Ferme at Allington by a just computation.

I expect foe long as they live with you their diet as you expressed, or in case of voluntarie partings 150 £. p. annum, 3000 £. in case you have a sonn to bee payed in two yeares next followinge.

In case your daughter die without issue 1000 f. within fix months. Sr. if this satisfie I desier a speedye resolution, I should the rather desier soe because of what your kinsman can satisfie you in. The Lord blesse you & your familye to whome I desier my affections and service may bee presented. I rest

Your humble fervant

March 25th 1649.

O. CROMWELL.

For my esteemed good Friend Richard Major, Esq; Theise at Hursley.

Sr.

124

Receaved yours of the 28th instant. I desier the matter of compensation may bee as in may last to you, you propose another way, which trulye seemes to mee very inconvenient, I have agreed to all other thinges as you take mee (& that rightly) repeating particulars in your paper. The Lord dispose this great businesse (greate betweene you & mee) for good. You mention to send by the post on Tuseday. I shall speede thinges heere as I may, I am designed for Ireland, which wil be speedye. I should bee very glad to see thinges setled before I goe, if the Lord will. My service to all your familye. I rest

March 30th 1649.

Your affectionate

(Name torn off.)

For my worthy Friend Richard Major, Esq; at Hursley.

Theise.

Sr.

Receaved your papers inclosed in your letter although I knowe not howe to make soe good use of them as otherwise might have beene to have saved expence of tyme if the arrest of your lawyer had not fallen out at this tyme. I conceave a draught to your satisfaction by your owne lawyer would have saved much tyme, which to mee is precious. I hope you will send some up perfectly instructed. I shall endeavour to speed what is to be donn on my part, not knowing how soone I may bee sent downe towards my charge for Ireland. And I hope to perform punctually with you. Sr. my sonn had a great desier to come downe & waite upon your daughter. I perceave hee minds that more then to attend businesses sinished before I goe. I trust not to bee wantinge therein. The Lord direct all our hartes into his good pleasure. I rest

My service to your Your affectionate servant lady & family.

O. CROMWELL.

April 6, 1649.

For my worthye Friend Richard Major, Efq; Theife.

Sr.

Your kindsman Mr. Barton and myselfe repayringe to our councell for the persectinge this businesse soe much concerninge us, did upon Saturday this 15th of Aprill drawe our councell to a meetinge whereupon consideration had of my letter to yourselfe expressinge my consent to perticulars which Mr. Barton brought to your councell, Mr. Hales of Lincolnes Inn; upon the readinge that which expressed the way of your settlinge Hursley, your kindsman expressed a sence of yours contrarie to the paper under my hand as also to that under your hand of the 28th of March which was the same with mine, as to that perticular, and

I knowe nothinge of doubt in that which I am to doe but doe agree itt all to your kindsman his satisfaction, not is there much materiall difference fave in this, wherein both my paper fent by you to your councell and yours of the 28th doe in all litterall and all equitable construction agree, viz. to settle an estate in see simple upon your daughter after your decease, which Mr Barton affirmes not to be your meaninge, although hee has not (as to mee) formerlye made this any objection nor can the words beare itt, nor have I any thinge more considerable in lewe of what I part with then this. And I have appealed to yours or any counsel in England whether it bee not just and equal that I infift thereupon. And this misunderstandinge (if it bee yours as it is your kindsman's) putt a stop to the businesse, so that our counsel could not proceede untill your pleasure herein were known, wherefore itt was thought fitt to desier Mr. Barton to have recourse to you to knowe your minde, hee alledginge hee had noe authoritye to understand that expression soe, but the contrarie, which was thought not a little strange even by your owne councell. I confesse I did apprehend wee should bee incident to mistakes treatinge att fuch a distance, although I may take the boldnesse to say there is nothinge expected from mee, but I agree itt to your kindsman's sense to a tittle. Sr. I defired to knowe what commission your kindsman had to helpe this doubt by an expedient who denied to have any. but did think it were better for you to part with fome monie, and keepe the power in your owne handes, as to the land, to dispose thereof as you should see cause, whereupon an overture was made and himselfe & your councell defired to drawe itt up; the effect whereof this enclosed paper conteynes, and although I should not like change of agreements, yet to shew how much I desier the perfecting of this businesse, if you like thereof (though this bee farr the worse bargaine, I shall submitt thereunto your councell thinkinge that thinges may bee fettled this way with more clearnesse & lesse intricasie. There is mention made of 900 f. pr. annum to bee referved, but itt comes to but about 800 f. my landes in Glamorgan sheire being but little above 400 f. pr. annum, and the 400 f. p. annum out my manour in Gloucester & Munmouth sheire. I wish a cleere understandinge may bee betweene us. Truly I would not willinglye mistake, desiringe to waite upon providence in this businesse. I rest

Sr.

Ap. 15th 1649. Your affectionate friend & servant

I desier my service may bee presented to your lady & daughters.

For my very loving Brother Richard Major, Esq; att Hurslye. Theise.

Lovinge Brother, (Recd 27 July, 1649. p. Messenger expresse from Newbery.)

Receaved your letter by major Longe, and doe in answare thereunto accordinge to my best understandinge, with a due confideration of those gentlemen whoe have abid the brunt of the fervice. I am very glad to heere of your welfare, & that our children have fo good leifure to make a journie to eate cherries, it's very excuseable in my daughter, I hope the may have a very good pretence for it. I affure you Sr. I wish her very well & I beleive shee knowes I pray you tell her from mee, I expect shee writes often to mee, by which I shall understand how all your familye doth, & shee will be kept in some exercise. I have delivered my fonn up to you, & I hope you will councell him, he will neede itt and indeed I beleive he likes well what you fay, & will be advised by you, I wish he may be ferious the tymes requier itt. I hope my fifter is in health, to whome I defier my very hartye affections and service may bee presented, as also to my cozen Ann to whom I wish a good husband. I desire my affections may be presented to all your familye, to which I wish a bleffinge from the Lorde. I hope I shall have your prayers in the bufinesse to which I am called. My wife I trust wil be with you before itt bee longe in her way towards Bristoll. Sr. discompose not your thoughts nor estate for what you are to pay mee. Lett me knowe wherein I may complye with your occasions and minde, and be confident you will finde mee to you as your owne heart wishinge your your prosperitye & contentment very synceerlye with the remembrance of my love. I rest

APPENDIX.

Your affectionate brother & servant

Bristoll, July 19th 1649.

O. CROMWELL.

(On the back of the foregoing letter, besides short hand, there is an account in Mr. Major's hand, of his sheep and other cattle.)

For my beloved Brother Richard Major, E/q; at Hurslye in the County of Hampton. Theise.

Deere Brother;

Am not often at leisure, nor nowe to salute my steindes, yet unwillinglye to loose this opportunitye, I take itt only to lett you knowe that you and your samilye are often in my prayers. I wish the younge ones well, though they vouchsase not to write to mee. As for Dick I doe not much expect itt from him, knowinge his idlenesse, but I am angrie with my daughter as a promise breaker, pray you tell her soe, but I hope shee will redeeme herselse.

It has pleased the Lord to give us (since the taking of Wexford & Rosse) a good interest in Munster by the access of Corke and Youghall, which are both submitted, their commissioners are nowe with mee. Diverse other lesser guarrisons are come in alsoe. The Lord is wonderfull in theife thinges, it's his hand aloane does them; O that all the praise might be ascribed to him. I have beene crazie in my health, but the Lord is pleased to sustaine mee. I begg your prayers. I defier you to call upon my form to minde the thinges of God more & more, alas what profitt is their in the thinges of this world, except they bee enjoyed in Christ they are snares. I wish he may enjoy his wife foe and shee him, I wish I may enjoy them both foe. My fervice to my deere fifter cozen Ann, my bleffinge to my children, and love to my cozen Barton and the rest.

I, am

Rosse, No. 13th 1649. Your affectionate brother & servant

Recd 120 Dec. 49

O. CROMWELL.

For my very lovinge Brother Richard Major, Esq; att Hurstlye in Hampsheir. Theise.

(This direction is in a Woman's hand: underneath are wrote in Mr. Major's hand these words; 15° May I wrote in behalfe of Mr. Bonny, &c. of Dorsett.)

Deere Brother,

FOR mee to write unto you the state of our affaires heere were more then indeed I have leisure well to doe, and therefore I hope you doe not expect itt from me feeinge when I write to the parint I usually am (as becomes mee) very particular with them, and usually from thence the knowledge thereof is spread. Only this lett mee fay (which is the best intelligence to friendes that are trulye christian) the Lord is pleased still to vouchsafe us his presence, & to prosper his owne worke in our handes which to us is the more eminent because trulye wee are a companie of poore weake and, worthlesse creatures. Trulye our worke is neither from our braines, nor from our courage and strength, but wee followe the Lord whoe goeth before and gather what hee skattereth, that soe all may appeare to bee from him. The takinge of the cittye of Kilkenny hath beene one of our last workes, which indeed I beleive hath beene a grate discomposeinge the enemie, its soe much in their bowells, wee have taken many confiderable places latelye without much losse. What can wee say to theise thinges, If God bee for us, whoe can be against us, whoe can fight against the Lord & prosper? Whoe can resist his will? The Lord keepe us in his love. I defier your prayers, your familye is often in mine, I rejoyced to heere how it hath pleased the Lord to deale with my daughter, the Lord bleffe her and fanctifie all his dispensations to them and us, I have committed my fonn to you, I pray councell him. Some letters I have lately had from him, have a good favor, the Lord treasure up grace there, that out of that treasurie hee may bringe forth good thinges. Sr. I defier my very entyer affection may be presented to my deere fifter, my cozen Ann, and the rest of my cozens, Mm and to idle Dick Norton when you fee him. Sr. I restrict the second seco

Your most loving brother

Ap. ye 2d 1650.

O. CROMWELL.

For my very lovinge Brother Richard Major, Efq; att his House at Hurslye. Theise.

Deere Brother,

THE exceedings croude of businesse I had att London is the best excuse I can make for my silence this way. Indeed Sr. my heart beareth me witnesse, I want noe affection to you or yours, you are all often in my poore prayers. I should be glad to heere how the little bratt doth. I could chide both father and the mother for theire neglects of mee, I knowe my fonn is idle, butt I had better thoughts of Doll, I doubt now her husband hath spoyled her, I pray tell her foe from mee. If I had as good leifure as they, I should write sometimes. If my daughter bee breedinge I will excuse her, but not for her nurserie, the Lord bleffe them. I hope you give my fonn good councell, I beleive he needes itt. Hee is in the dangerous time of his age, and its a very vaine world, O how good itt is to close with Christ betimes, there is nothinge else worth the lookinge after. I befeech you call upon him, I hope you will discharge my dutye and your owne love: you see how I am imployed, I neede pittye, I knowe what I feele, great place and businesse in the world is not worth the lookinge after, I should have no comfort in mine, but that my hope is in the Lord's presence, I have not fought theife thinges, truly I have beene called to them by the Lord, and therefore am not without some good affureance that hee will inable his poore worme, and weake fervant to doe his will, & to fullfill my generation. this I begg your prayers, desiringe to be lovinglye remembred to my deere sister, to our sonn & daughter, my cozen Ann and the good family. I rest

Your very affectionate brother

Alnwick, July 17, 1650.

O. CROMWELL.

For my lovinge Brother Richard Mayor, Esq; at Hursley. Theise. In Hantsheire neere Winchester.

Deere Brother,

HAvinge foe good an occasion as the impartinge foe great a mercie as the Lord hath voutchsafed unto us in Scotland I would not omitt the impartinge thereof to you, though I bee full of businesse. Upon Wedensd. wee fought the Scottish armie: They were in number accordinge to all computation above twentye thousand, wee hardly eleven thousand, havinge greate sicknesses upon our armie, after much apealinge to God, the fight lafted above an hower, wee killed (as most thinke) three thoufand, tooke neere ten thousand prisoners, all their traine, about thirtye gunns great and fmale befides bullet, match and powder, very confiderable officers, about two hundred colors, above ten thousand armes, lost not thirtie men. This is the Lords doeing, and it is marvelous in our eyes. Good Sr. give God all the glorie, stirr up all yours & all about you to doe foe, pray for your affectionate brother

O. CROMWELL.

I desier my love may bee presented to my deere sister and to all your familie. I pray tell Doll I doe not forgett her nor her little bratt, shee writes very cuninglye & complementally to mee, I expect a letter of plaine dealinge from her; shee is too modest to tell mee whether shee breedes or not. I wish a blessinge upon her & her husband, the Lord make them fruitfull in all that's good, they are att leisure to write often but indeed they are both idle & worthie of blame.

Dunbarr, Sept. 4th 1650.

(No Direction.)

Deere Brother,

I Was glad to receave a letter from you, for indeed any thinge that comes from you is very welcome to mee. I beleive your expectation of my fonn's cominge is deferred.

ferred. I wish hee may see a happie deliverye of his wise first, for whom I frequently pray.

I heere my fonn hath exceeded his allowance, and is in debt; truly I cannot comend him therein, wisdom requireinge his livinge within compasse and callinge for it his: handes: And in my judgment the reputation arifinge from thence would have beene more real honour then what is attained the other way. I beleive vain men will speake well of him that does ill. I defier to bee understood that I grudge him not laudible recreations, nor an honorable carriage of himselse in them, nor is any matter of charge like to fall to my share, a slick with mee. Truly I can finde in my heart to allow him not only a fufficiency but more for his good, but if pleasure and selfe sattisfaction bee made the bufineffe of 'a man's life, foe much cost layd out uppon it, foe much tyme spent in itt as rather answers appetite then the will of God, or is comely before his Saints, I scruple to seede this humor and God forbid that his being my fonn should bee his allowance to live not pleafinglye to our Heavenly Father, whoe hath raised mee out of the dust to what I am. I desier your faythfullnesse (hee beinge alfoe your concernment as well as mine) to advise him to approve himself to the Lord in his course of life, and to fearch his statutes for a rule to conscience, & to feeke grace from Christ to enable to walke therein. This hath life in itt, and will come to fomwhat; what is a poore creature without this? This will not abridge of lawfull pleasures but teach such an use of them as will have the peace of a good conscience goinge alonge with itt. Sr. I write what is in my heart; I pray you comunicate my minde herein to my fonn and be his remembrancer in theife thinges. Truly I love him, hee is deere to me; foe is his wife, and for their fakes doe I thus write. They shall not want comfort nor incoragment from mee so far as I may afford itt; but indeed I cannot thinke I doe well to feede a voluptuous humor in my fonn, if he should make pleasures the businesse of his life in a time when some precious Saincts are bleeding and breathinge out their last for the good and fafetye of the rest. Memorable is the speech of Urijah to David, 2d Cron. 11th 11th.

Sr. I befeech you beleive I heere fay not this to fave my purse for I shall willinglye do what is convenient to satisf-

fie his occasions as I have opportunitye, but as I pray hee may not walke in a course not pleasing to the Lord, soe thinke itt lyeth upon mee to give him (in love) the best councell I may, and know not how better to conveigh it to him then by soe good a hand as yours.

Sr. I pray you acquaint him with theife thoughts of mine, and remember my love to my daughter for whose fake I shall be induced to doe any reasonable thinge. I pray for her happie deliverance frequently and earnestly.

I am forrie to heere my baylye in Hantsheire should do to my fonn as is intimated by your letter. I assure you I shall not allowe any such thinge. If there bee any suspition of his abuse of the woode I desier it may be looked after and inquired into, that soe if things appeare true he may bee removed, although indeed I must needs say he had the repute of a godly man by diverse that knew him when I placed him there:

Sr. I defier my hartye affection may bee presented to my fister, my cozen Ann; and her husband though unknown.

I praise the Lord I have obteyned much mercye in respect of my health, the Lord give mee a truly thankfull hart. I desier your prayers, & rest

Your very affectionate brother and fervant

June 28th
1651.

O. CROMWELL.

For my lovinge Brother Richard Major, Esq; at Hurslye in Hantsheire. Theise.

Deere Brother,

Receaved your lovinge letter for which I thanke you, and fuerly were itt fitt to proceed in that businesse, you should not in the least have beene putt upon any thinge but the trouble, for indeed the land in Essex, with some monie in my hand & some other remnants should have gone towards itt. But indeed I am soe unwillinge to bee a seeker after the world, havinge had so much favor from the Lord in givinge me soe much without seekinge, & soe unwillinge that men should think mee soe, which they will though you only appeare in itt (for they will by one M m 2 meanes or other knowe it) that indeed I dare not meddle. nor proceede therein. Thus I have tould you my plain thoughts. My hartye love I present to you & my fifter, my bleffinge and love to deere Doll & the little one, with love to all. I rest

Your lovinge brother.

May the 4th 1654. edp it sidings or to the

OLIVER P.

For my lovinge Friend John Dunch, Efq; This is the second of the seco

 $i_{j}S_{j\bullet_{j}}$, i_{j} , i_{j} , i_{j} , i_{j} , i_{j} , i_{j} , i_{j}

T Desier to speake with you, & heeringe a report from Hurstye that you was goinge to y' father's in Berkesheire, I fend this expresse to you desiring you to come to mee to Hampton Court: with my respects to y' father, Treft ian anglos i ya

Y lovinge friend . 12 . 2 .

the Aug. 27th 1657. 419

11.1 ... 7.0

ared the rest river a war in the season Oliver P.

and the late of the strict of the strict was e pade to the first of a second that that the second especial of and of the second and and second of the emolekarz welchen hand en hanne en alle en alle en in the contract of the cont sed ut a m. tru bot mar i in busiding of a

with the same

ະຕິເລີ ພາດປີ ເປັນ ທຳ ພາກ ການຄ້າຍຕາ ຄວາມ ເປັນ ຜູ້ roda dolam son once is a localization of Copies

meaner

Copies of original Letters and Papers of Oliver Cromwell's in the British Museum: Copied by leave of a Committee, by the Rev. A. Gifford, D. D. for the Use of the Author.

A Copy of Oliver Cromwell's Letter to his Daughter Ireton, exactly taken from the Original.

Deere Daughter,

Write not to thy husband, partly to avoyd trouble, for one line of mine begitts many of his, weh I doubt makes him sitt up too late, partly because I am my selfe indisposed att this tyme, havinge some other considerations. Your friends att Ely are well, your fister Clapole is (I trust in mercye) exercifed with fome perplexed thoughts, shee fees her owne vanitye, and carnal minde, bewailinge itt, shee seekes after (as I hope alsoe) that weh will satisfie, and thus to bee a feeker, is to bee of the best sect next a finder, and fuch an one shall every faythfull humble seeker bee att the end. Happie seeker, happie sinder: Whoe ever tasted that the Lord is gracious, without some sence of felf vanitve, and badnesse? Whoe ever tasted that graciousnesse of his, and could goe lesse in desier, and lesse then pressinge after full enjoyment. Deere hart presse on; lett not husband lett not any thinge coole thy affections after Christ. I hope hee wil be an occasion to enslame them. That weh is best worthy, of love in thy husband, is that of the image of Christ hee beares, looke on that, and love it best and all the rest for that, I pray for thee, and him, doe foe for me. My fervice and deere affections to the generall, an generalesse, I heere she is very kind to thee, it adds to all other obligations. My love to all, I am thy deere father

OLIVER CROMWELL.

O&sb. 25,

The Superscription.

London. For hys beloved daughter Bridget Ireton at Cornbury, the Gen1. quarters, theife.

This is a true copy taken Septemb. 14, 1759, from Harl. Mff. No. 6988. M m 4 For

For the Honorable Will Lenthall, Efq; Speaker of the Parliament. Theife.

Sr.

Befeech you upon that scoare of favor (if I be not too bould to call it friendship) which I have ever had from you, lett me desier you to promote my partners humble suite to the house, and obtaine (as farr as possibly you may) some just satisfaction for him, I know his sufferinges for the publick have beene great, besides the loss of his callinge by his attendance heere: His affections have beene true, and constant, and I beleive his decay great in his estate, it wil be justice and charitye to him, and I shall acknowledge itt as a fauor to

Your most humble servant

July 10, 1649.

O. CROMWELL.

This is exactly copied from the original in Harl. Msf. 6988. Sept. 13, 1759.

To Colonel Hacker. (Wrote in another Hand.)

Sr.

Have the best consideration I can for the præsent in this bufinesse, and although I beleiue capt. Hubbert is a worthy man, and heere foe much, yett as the case stands, I cannott with fatisfaction to my felfe, and some others revoake the commission I had given to capt. Empson, wthout offence to them, and reflection upon my owne judgment, I pray lett capt. Hubbert knowe, I shall not be unmindefull of him, and that noe difrespect is intended to him. But indeed I was not fatisfied with your last speech to mee about Empson, that hee was a better præcher then a fighter or fouldier, or words to that effect. Truly I thinke hee that prayes & præches best will fight best, I know nothing will give like courage and confidence as the knowledge of God in Christ will, and I bless God to see any in this armye able and willinge to impart the knowledge they have for

for the good of others. And I expect it to be encoraged by all cheife officers in this armye especially, and I hope you will do soe. I pray receave capt. Empson lovinglye, I dare assure you hee is a good man and a good officer, I would wee had noe worse. I rest

Your louinge freind

Dec, 25, 1650.

O. CROMWELL.

An exact copy from Harl. M.J. No. 5. 7502. 18 Sept.

My Deereft,

I Could not fatisfie my selfe to omitt this poass, although I have not much to write, yet indeed I love to write to my deere whoe is very much in my heart, it joyes mee to heere thy soule prospereth, the Lord increase his favors to thee more and more. The great good thy soule can wish is that the Lord lift upon thee, the light of his countenance which is better then life. The Lord blesse all thy good councell and example to those about thee, and heere all thy prayers, and accept thee alwayes. I am glad to heere thy some good oportunitye of good advise to him. Present my duty to my mother, my love to all the familye. Still pray for thine

O. CROMWELL.

Edinburgh 3d of May, 1651.

Exactly copyed from the original in Harl. Mff. 7502. No. 6. Sept. 19, 1759.

Bibliothecæ Sloanianæ, Micc. 345. pag. 126.

Sr

Defire you to fend mee the resons of the Scotts to inforce ther * desire of uniformity in religion expressed in ther * 8 article, I mean that which I had before of you, I would peruse itt against wee fall upon that debate which wil be speedily.

Yours OL. CROMWELL.

To his loving friend Mr. Willingham, att his house in Swithins Lanc.

* Whether the last letter is an e or r I am not certain, the rest is exactly copied. Sept. 22, 1759.

In the possession of James Lamb, Esq; of Fairford, in Gloucestershire.

For ye Honoble the Committee for the army these.

T was not a little wonder to me to fee that you should fend Mr. Symonds for great a journey about a business importinge fo little as far as it relates to me, when as if my poore opinion may not be rejected by you, I have to offer to that weh I thinke the most noble end, to with the comemoracon of that great mercie att Dunbar, & the gratuitie to the army, we's might better be expressed upon the meddal by engraving as on the one fide the parliamt weh I heare was intended & will do fingularly well, fo on the other fide an army wth this inscription over the head of it, The Lord of Hofts, wch was or word that day; wherefore if I may begg it as a favor from you I most earnestly befeech you if. I may doe it wthout offence that it may be foe, & if you thinke not fitt to have it as I offer, you may alter it as you fee cause, only I doe thinke I may truely fay it wil be verie thankfully acknowledged by me, if you will spare the having my effigies in it.

The gentlemans paynes & trouble hither have been verie great, & I shall make it my second suite unto you that you will please to conferr upon him that imploym' in yor service we'h Nicholas Briott had before him, indeed the man is ingenious & worthie of incouragem'. I may not presume much, but if at my request & for my sake he may obteyne this favor, I shall putt it upon the accompt of my obligacons we'h are not a few, & I hope shall be found readie gratefully to acknowledge & to approve myself, Gentl.

6

Edinburgh, 4th of Feb. 1650.

Yor most reall serve,

O. CROMWELL.

An oval medal in filver of general Cromwell in profile, was struck, in commemoration of the victory at Dunbar, as it is thought, by his own appointment; being the first drawn for him from the life, by Simon; and is remarkable for his likeness when lieutenant-general; as it does appear, by comparing it with a picture drawn of him by Walker. his painter, about that time. The profile of this medal, differing in some respects from a medal copied by Simon also from a curious limning drawn by Samuel Cooper; the original whereof is preserved in the collection of the duke of Devonshire. - But these are frequently seen in silver, and fometimes in gold; and when fairly struck, and well preserved, do great honour to the ingenious artist who engraved these curious and memorable medals. See Medals, great feals, impressions, from the elaborate works of Thomas Simon, chief engraver of the mint to King Charles I. to the Commonwealth, the Lord Protector Cromwell, and in the reign of King Charles II. to 1665. By George Vertue. 4to 1753. p. 13.

In the Possession of the Rev. Dr. Birch.

Copy of Oliver Cromwell's Letter to Mr. Cotton, Octob. 2, 1651.

Worthy Sir and my Christian Friend,

I Receaved yours a few dayes fithence, it was welcome to mee, because figned by you, whome I love and honour in the Lord. But more to see some of the same grounds grounds of our actinges stirringe in you, that have in us to quiet us in our worke, and support us therein, which hath had greatest difficultye in our engagement with Scotland, by reason wee have had to doe with some, whoe were (I verily thinke) godly, but through weaknesse and the subtiltie of Sathan, involved in interest against the Lord, and his people. With what tendernesse wee have proceeded with fuch, and that in synceritie, our papers (which I suppose you have seen) will in part manifest; and I give you some comfortable * * * * * assurance off. The Lord hath marvelously appeared even against them. And now againe when all the power was devolved into the Scotish Kinge, and the malignant partie, they invadinge England, the Lord rayned upon them fuch snares as the enclosed will shew, only the narrative is short in this, that of their whole armie when the narrative was framed, not five of their whole armie returned. Surely Sr. the Lord is greatly to bee feared, as to be praifed. Wee need your prayers in this as much as ever, how shall wee behave ourselves after such mercyes? What is the Lord a doeinge? What prophefies are now fulfillinge? Who is a God like ours? To knowe his will, to doe his will are both of him.

I tooke this libertye from businesse to salute you thus in a word, truly I am ready to serve you, and the rest of our brethren and the churches with you, I am a poor weake creature, and not worthy the name of a worme, yet accepted to serve the Lord and his people; indeed my dear friend between you and mee you know not mee, my weaknesses, my inordinate passions, my unskilfulnesse, and every way unstrussed to my worke, yett, yett, the Lord who will have mercye on whome hee will, does as you see. Pray for mee, salute all christian friends though unknown. I rest

Your affectionate friend to serve you,

OA. 2, 1651.

O. CROMWELL.

For my esteemed friend Mr. Cotton pastor to the church at Boston in New Bugland. Theise.

e. consider of description of the contract of

Copy of a Letter to L. General Fleetwood (who married Bridget, eldest Daughter of O. Cromwell, and Widow of General Ireton,) in the Post ston of Mrs. Cook of Newington in Middlesex, Grand Daughter of that General.

Decre Charles,

A Lthough I doe not foe often (as is defired by me) acquaint you howe itt is with mee, yett I doubt not of your prayers in my behalfe that in all thinges I may walke as becometh the Gospell. Truly I never more needed all helps from my christian friends than nowe, fayne would I have my fervice accepted of the Saincts (if the Lord will) but it is not foe, beinge of different judgments, and of each fort, most feekinge to propagate their owne, that spirit of kindnesse that is to them all, is hardly accepted of any. I hope I can fay it my life has beene a willinge a facrifice and I hope is, for them all: Yett it much falls out as when the two Hebrews were rebuked, you know upon whom they turned their displeasure; but the Lord is wife, and will I trust make manifest that I am no enemie, Oh how easy is mercye to bee abused. Perswade friends with you to be very sober. If the day of the Lord be so neere (as some say) how should our moderation appeare. If every one (instead of contending) would justifie his forme by love and meeknesse, wildom would be justified of her children, but alas I am in my tentation ready to fay, Oh would I had winges like a dove, then would I, &c. but this I feare is my haft. I bleffe the Lord I have somewhat keepes me alive some sparkes of the light of his countenance, and some synceritye above mans judgment, excuse me thus unbowellinge my selfe to you, pray for mee and defire my freindes to doe foe also, my love to thy deere wife whom indeed I entyerly love, both naturally, and upon the best account, and my bleffinge (if it be worth any thinge) upon thy little babe. Sr. George Ascough havinge occasions with you defired my letters to you on his behalfe; if hee come or fend, I pray you shew him what favour you can. Indeed his fervices have been confiderable for the flate, and I doubt hee hath not been answered with suitable respect. Therefore again

I desier you, and the commissioners to take him into a very particular care & helpe him foe farr as iustice and reason will any wayes afford. Remember my harty affections to all the officers. The Lord bleffe you all, Soe prayeth

August 22th, Your truly lovinge father. 1653.

O. CROMWELL.

All heere love you, and are in health, your children and all.

cated by Nicolas Munckley, of Lincoln's Inn, Efg;

Communi- The following was taken from the impression from a copper plate gilt, found in a leaden canister, lying on the breast of the corpse, when the grave and coffin of Oliver Cromwell were broke open by order of the government after the restoration, in order to have his body hanged up at Tyburn.

The plate and canister were preserved by serjeant Norfolk, then serjeant at arms to the house of commons, who left it to his only daughter and child Mary, who married Hope Gifford, Esq; J. C. at Colchester, whose only daughter and child Mary, married Sir Anthony Abdy of Felix-Hall, Esfex, near Kelvedon, Bart. who left it to his third wife, by whose permission Dr. Mortimer, S. R. Secr. obtained the impression from the original plate in the year 1739.

· Oliverius Protector Reipublicæ Angliæ, Scotiæ, et Hiberniæ, Natus 25° Aprilis Anno 1599°, Inauguratus 16° Decembris 1653, Mortuus 3° Septembris Anno

6 1658°, hic fitus eft.'

Jan. 30. O. S. "The odious carcasses of O. Cromwell, H. Ireson, and J. Bradshaw drawn upon sledges to Tyburn, and being pulled out of their coffins, there hanged at the feveral angles of that triple tree till fun fet. Then taken down, beheaded, and their loathsome truncks thrown into a deep hole under the gallowes. Their heads were afterwards fet upon poles on the top of West-" minster-Hall.' Gesta Britannorum, at the end of Whartin's Almanack for 1663.

The

The mason's receipt for taking up the corpse; from a copy under Dr. Cromwell Mortimer's hand, taken from the original receipt.

May the 4th day, 1661, Recd then in full of the worshipful serjeant Norfolke, siveteen shillinges, for taking up the corpes of Cromell, & Ierton & Brasaw.

Rec. by mee John Lewis.'

N I S.

ZIEKKU TIT N

The state of the s

Fillwin Herson M. J. R.

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA LIBRARY Los Angeles This book is DUE on the last date stamped below. REC'D URL LD REC'D LD RE

LD-URL OCT 1 6 1967 APR 19 1988

CEC D LD-URL

ORION DLD-URL

ORION DLD-URL

ORION DLD-URL

ORION DLD-URL

ORION DLD-URL

JAN 0 7 1990

JUN 2'75 JUN 1 6 1975

SOI

ER!

AR'

NEV

NV 5078

DISCHARGE-URL

JAN 1 9 1981

Form L9-50m-4,'61 (B8994s4)444

LI (MAESSA)

X DT ANGELLS

OF TAUFORA

JF-CALIFOR

REC'D LD-URL 21 MAY 30 '90

23 00:112

≢[†]re∳